A Bear Scrape.

On Saturday, the 1st of the current month, a son of Mr. Robert McDonald, of Earl Town, (not far from Pictou) was sent to examine a poteto field to ascertain if any cattle had broken into ft. After proceeding about 20 rods from the house, he was attacked by a she bear with four cubs. The bear immediately seized him and threw him violently on the ground. As soon as he rose she struck him again, and he fell. When he rose the second time he attempted to strike her with a small stick, but she caught him again and tore his head fearfully and he was prostrated a third time. Providentially, at this critical moment some movement among the cubs withdrew her attention from the boy. who seized the opportunity and aprung over a fence near which the event occurred. The bear instantly followed, but when she alighted on the fence it gave way under her, and before she could recover, the boy happily effected his escape. When he arrived at the nearest house, he was literally covered with blood, and not a shred of his clothing remained except the collar of his shirt. For some time his life was despaired of, but now sanguine hopes of recovery are entertained .- Picton Mechanic and Furmer.

A Gem for the Bereaved.

There are four lines of Pollock's Course of Time, the authorship of which we would not exchange for that of many of the "two volume" works with which the world is daily infested. They contain the simile, admirable beyond any thing we have met with for many years. They are the closing lines of a touching description of a dying mother. Speaking of her eyes shining with resplendent brightness even in the moment of her dissolution, the poet says-

"They set as sets the morning star, which go s Not down behind the dukered West, nor hides O scured among the temp sts of the sky. But melts away into the light of heaven."

The close of life has often been compared to the flower, fading in its leveliness-to the going down of the sun-to the stars. "That fall to rise no more,"

These descriptions are mournfully welcome to the human breast, bleeding with anguish, when all that it loves descends to the remorseless tomb, but they leave even hope in darkness. In the simile of which we speak in no measured language, the effect is the very reverse. The eyes closing in death, still beaming with celestial brightness, are compared to the beautiful Hesperus, shining from the unclouded heavens, and gradually melting | Heinen & Followt into the refulgence of the rising day. It is indeed beautiful-transcendantly beautiful. There is a something-it is a moral sublimity in the William Hays very thought, that affords us a conscious tri- William Forsythe umph over the frailties of humanity, and we almost involuntarily exclaim, "How beautiful is the court of death !"
