Ngozi Ukeje Mboto is the new minority student and special programs counselor at Behrend.

Mboto formerly worked at Rutgers University in New Jersey. She replaced Gerald Spates who is currently working at Western Kentucky University.

While working at Rutgers, she continued to search for employment here. She said, "My husband got an appointment with General Electric in Erie four years ago. But I could not find a job here."

Ken Miller, associate dean of student affairs said, "We were looking for someone who was going to come in and bring new ideas and a new vision. And we think she's the person to do that. Mboto is a very well-seasoned professional."

A native Nigerian, Mboto received her fundamental education in Africa. Her undergraduate study was completed at Hunter College. She has received Master's degrees in industrial management and human resource management from the State University of New York at Stony Brook and Rutgers University respectively.

Mboto has multiple responsibilities as the minority student and special programs counselor.

Much of her work revolves around retention programs for students of color. She will also coordinate Veteran Affairs and programs for students with learning or physical disabilities.

When asked about the status quo, Mboto said, "I have not been here long enough to study everything, but there is room for improvement in any environment."

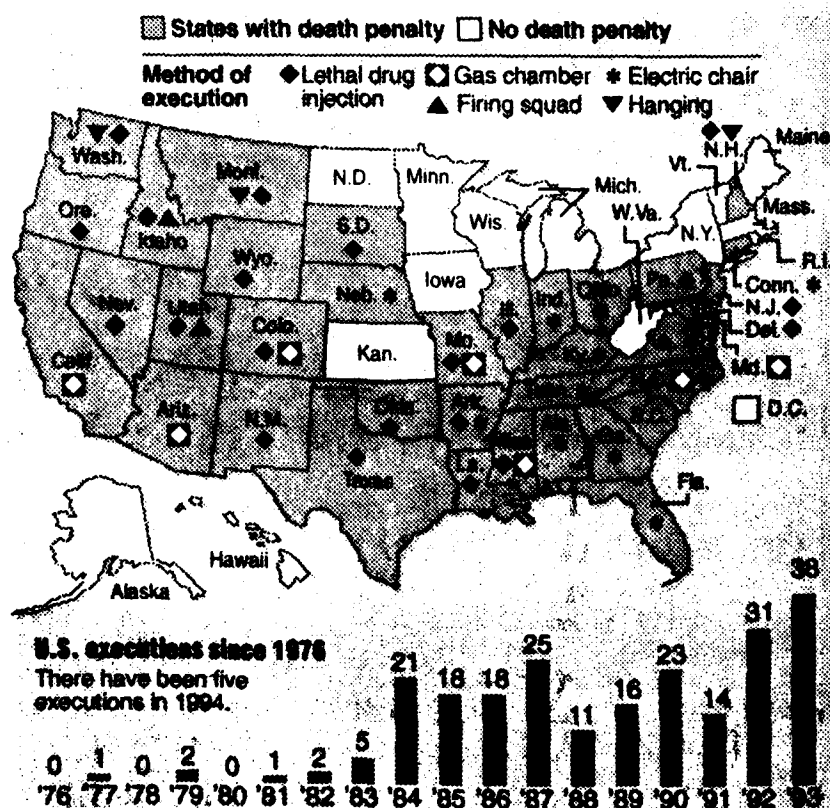

Death penalty states
