Star Wars, Phantom Menace: The Saga Begins...And Ends For Me

By Katie Galley editorial page editor

Last semester, starting in early April, I started thinking about the new Star Wars movie, Episode One, The Phantom Menace. I was looking forward to seeing it, how could you not be? But the release date was still far away. And there were final exams to deal with. However, by the first week of May it was ALL that I thought about.

The weeks before it was released were very painful for me. I lived and breathed Star Wars, day and night. I would ask people that came into where I worked if they would be seeing Star Wars. Those that said "Yes" were cheered, those that answered "No", were served with a scowl. I searched the department stores for Star Wars merchandise. I played game upon game of Star Wars Monopoly. I visited Star Wars website after Star Wars website, looking for the trailer to appease my obsession. May 19 could not come fast enough for me.

Then I heard about ALL the people that were dying to see Star Wars, just like me...and I got worried. I worried that I would not be able to get in to see the first showing of it...apparently people planned on getting in line very early, possibly days before to get their tickets. Well, there was NO way that I was not going to get in the theater for the first showing. I called the movie theater in my town and found out that there was a midnight showing for the night before the actual movie was to be released. Score! I had found my way in.

About 2 a.m., the day before the special midnight showing, me and a carload of my friends got together and gathered our sleeping bags, made some sandwiches and bought some pop. We then threw it all in my car and raced down to the theater so we could be the first in line for tickets for the special screening. Remember, this is a whole 48 hours before the actual release date ... we were convinced that people would already be down at the theater and beating us out for tickets. So down to the theater we raced ...

theater in a small town at 2 a.m.? If you have you know what we found when we got there. If you haven't, let me tell you what we found...nothing. There was nothing, or more specifically, nobody there. So, I guess my town wasn't as Star carload of people was the first in Wars crazy as I had originally line. We were the first people in our the trilogy?! My happy, little Star thought, but all I knew was that we were there for the duration.

After alternating between sleeping, eating and running across the street to Giant Eagle for bathroom breaks for 6 hours, other people finally started showing up at 8am. At first we were all leery of each other, trying to make sure that no one jumped ahead of you, or no one spared anyone in line. But soon, everyone realized that we were there for the same reason and the camaraderie began. We were all die-hard Star Wars fans! Have you ever gone to a movie So 27 games of Star Wars Monopoly. 15 bathroom breaks, 3 large pizzas and 9 hours later, the tickets were dispersed and we were to go home and come back at 11pm.

> The wait for 11pm was tedious and drawn out, but it did come. And my town to see Star Wars, The Phantom Menace!

The first hour of the movie flew by and we were all introduced to the new characters that will be with us for two more Star Wars movies. As I had with the previous Star Wars movies, I found myself cheering for the good guys and booing for the bad guys. Order in the Empire was restored for the meantime. The theater lights came back up and we were ushered out, and after the initial awe of the movie was over, I began to think.

I really didn't like it as much as I had the original Star Wars. I didn't like the high-tech world that these characters lived in. And in one case, (Jar-Jar Binks), I hated the characters themselves. And why did they kill Darth Maul in the first part of Wars bubble was completely popped. I am sad to say it, and after all that hype in the beginning of the article...Star Wars the Phantom Menace, was a disappointment. No one was more distraught over this than me. I had waited, and anticipated for this hyped up media event, and it was overrated.

I initially tried to deny my dislike for the movie, I even went to see it again. I still bought some of the toys and I even own a Queen Amidala Tshirt. However, nothing is sadder than a disappointed Star Wars freak. George Lucas has 3 years to redeem himself with me. Even though I hated the first part of the trilogy, I will be in attendance for the second and third parts, if only to be part of a pop culture sensation. But George, if you are reading this, Kill Jar-Jar, PLEASE!
