

WEEKEND WEATHER

SATURDAY	SUNDAY	MONDAY
High: 50° Low: 44°	High: 54° Low: 47°	High: 57° Low: 39°

PENN STATE NEWS

courtesy of Penn State newswire for the week of Oct. 20, 2003

Penn State women's athletics to celebrate 40 years of excellence

Marking its 40th anniversary of women's athletics on the University Park campus, the Penn State Intercollegiate Athletics Department has unveiled the logo that will correspond with the year long celebration of women's sports at the University. The celebration will culminate with a weekend of festivities from April 30 through May 2, 2004. "We are very excited and proud to be marking an anniversary for a department that is tied to such a rich tradition of success and such a bright future to come," said Tim Curley, director of athletics. "We hope that this will be an event that brings our former women letterwinners back to campus to celebrate both their contributions to Penn State athletics and applaud the efforts of today's Nittany and Lady Lions." Read the full story at www.GoPSUsports.com/pressreleases/pressrelease.cfm?anncid=4994

Hantz to compete in world wheelchair championships

Jeff Hantz, a senior in the Schreyer Honors College majoring in computer science, will represent the United States in the World Wheelchair Championships in New Zealand, which runs through through Nov. 1. Hantz competed and improved lifetime bests in 5 of 6 events at a paralympic competition held this September. This past May he set an American record in the discus during a competition on Virginia. His only lifetime best that was not surpassed was his American record in the disc. Hantz also has successfully competed in wheelchair weight lifting and wheelchair tennis programs at Penn State, where he is an honors student in computer science and plays in the pep band at basketball games. He plans to go to graduate school to pursue a Ph.D. in computer science and later teach at a university. Read more on Hantz's achievements that led to his upcoming appearance in the World Wheelchair Championships at <http://live.psu.edu/story/3284>

Penn State Portal opens door to the future

While a number of research universities across the nation are rethinking their portals and even retiring them Penn State's Portal is alive and kicking, providing numerous community services, plus a cost-effective way for students, staff and faculty to manage today's high-volume Internet data. This semester, an expansion and remodeling of the Penn State Portal now offers its users a total of 380 "channels" that can be selected to provide news, career planning services, weather, Web cameras, arts, entertainment, science, event calendars and more. Portal users can also select between fourteen new interface themes, designed to help Penn State community members customize and personalize their own "digital" view of University and Commonwealth services. Read the full story at <http://live.psu.edu/story/4248>

POLICE AND SAFETY

- 10/16/03 17:55 Complainant reported the theft of his cellular phone.
- 10/17/03 10:20 Complainant reported receiving harassing phone calls today and on Oct. 15
- 10/19/03 13:35 Complainant reported property stolen from his dorm room in Lawrence.
- 10/21/03 20:15 Complainant called to report that while playing flag football she was hit hard and bounced her head off the ground. She felt nauseous and dizziness but she did not want an ambulance. A friend transported her to St. Vincent's Hospital.

CLASSIFIED

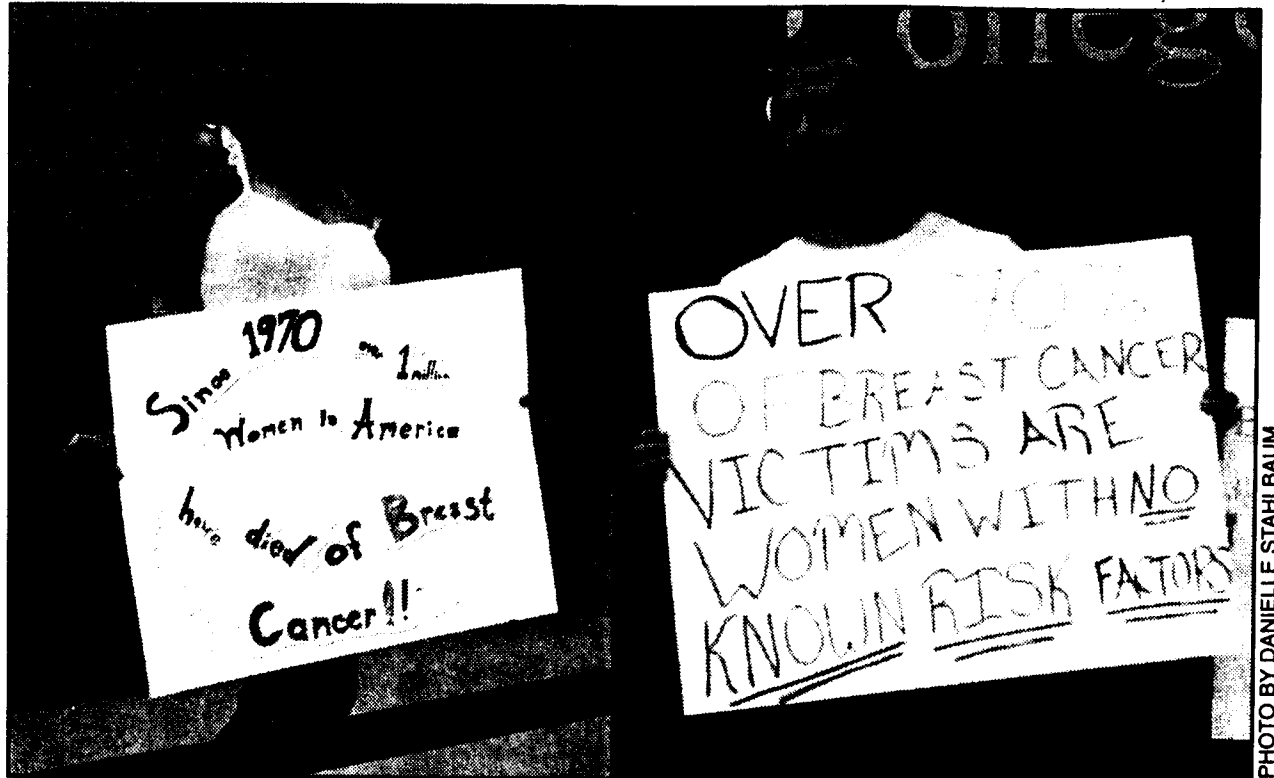

Addressers wanted immediately!
No experience necessary.
Work at home.
Call 405-447-6397

"We are fellow passengers on the same planet and we are all equally responsible for the happiness and the well-being of the world in which we happen to live." – Hendrick van Loon.

Janet Neff Sample Center for Manners & Civility

FOCAL POINTS

Models from Women Today's Pink Fashion show strut their stuff on the catwalk in support of breast cancer awareness. October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month. The event featured over 10 models.

PHOTO BY DANIELLE STAHLBAUM

Kevin Schrecongost, MIS 06, gets into the Christmas spirit with his tassel cap while at work in the Back Room.

PHOTO BY LAUREN PACKER/BEHREND BEACON

Victoria Anderson, COMBA 07, is caught wearing a sandwich board promoting the ABC candy sale.

PHOTO BY LAUREN PACKER/BEHREND BEACON

Chad Triscuit, DUS 03, and Adria Maloney, GAS 05, sit outside Tumbull and sketch an Intro to Art project.

PHOTO BY LAUREN PACKER/BEHREND BEACON