Aquila takes the reins

New H&SS Director foresees positive future

By Lacy Buzard
copy editor

Dr. Richard Aquila, the new director of Humanities and Social Sciences, looks forward to moving the school ahead to excellence in teaching as well as excellence in scholarship. Dr. Aquila is replacing Dr. Loss who served as interim director of H&SS. The director of H&SS supervises all faculty and operations within the department. Dr. Loss is still teaching his Pop Culture class as well as various other courses.

Dr. Aquila believes that the H&SS department is already accomplished in both teaching and scholarship and he is ready to see the faculty accomplish more. "Excellence in teaching and excellence in scholarship should spill over into one another. This not only benefits the professor, but the students as well."

Operating on the philosophy that a successful director is inherently a successful facilitator, he believes that consensus building between directors, faculty and students is essential to both setting and attaining goals. He wants to be certain that School of Humanities and Social Sciences is awarded its fair share of resources from Penn State.

Although he has only been situated in his position for eight weeks, he has been impressed by the resumes of the H&SS faculty and he looks forward to firsthand interaction with students. Unfortunately, he will not be able to directly access students in the classroom until next year when he will begin teaching one course in history per semester. To resolve this issue he thinks that a student forum in which he would carry on a dialogue with students about any issues that concern them would be beneficial to him during his first year as director.

Originally from Buffalo, N.Y., Dr. Aquila received his undergraduate degree from Bowling Green State University with a major in journalism and a minor in history. It was at Bowling Green that he decided he would like to focus more on his minor. He then went on to receive his graduate degree and PhD in history from Ohio State University. United States Social and Cultural History has been his preferred area of study and he has excelled in this genre. He has been able to apply both journalism and history to his work and has published books in a wide variety of subjects ranging from the Iroquois Culture to Rock & Roll of the 1950's and 60's.

Accepting the position of Director of Humanities and Social Sciences at Behrend was to accept a new challenge in a comfortable atmosphere for Dr. Aquila. He has always enjoyed the Lake Erie region and Erie is a perfect central location to the two cities with which he is most familiar: Buffalo, N.Y. and Cleveland, Ohio.

Dr. Aquila is a teacher-scholar at heart and has a real interest in the students and genuinely wants to help ease their concerns. "My door is always open for faculty and students," he stated during the interview. Naturally his door may not be open if he has other obligations but there is always the option for anyone to make an appointment.

No matter which path you choose for your educational career, whether you plan to find a job or continue with graduate school, Dr. Aquila will give you this advice: "Follow your interests; be active participants; be responsible."

Perhaps it was the allure of the free Bruno's pizza that attracted Behrend students to the Reed Union Building on Thursday. Members of the Speak Out Your College Voice Committee, however, hope the students who came to fill out their voter registration forms Thursday, September 2 did so to make their voices heard.

Members of Government Affairs and the Senat Resident Assistants co-sponsored the event that took place from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. Resident Life donated the pizza.

The official number of registrations the committee received has yet to be officially tallied, but committee member Ilona Joseph, ACNTG 03, said the turnout was good.

"A lot of people are interested in learning more about both sides of the issues," said Joseph.

Deepti Soni, INTPL 03, the event chairwoman, said that the committee also pushed for registrations at the freshman orientation party and at the commuter student sign-in last weekend. "So far this year," she said, "the committee has registered about 150 people, and the numbers from Thursday's drive will push that number even higher."

"Being the director of Governmental Affairs, I think it's very important. As young individuals, we sometimes behave very apathetically to our surroundings," said Soni. "I feel it's important for legislators to realize we students have a voice. This being an election year, there are many issues at stake such as the war in Iraq, health care and student funding. It's important for people to realize their vote can make a difference."

The students who came to Reed to register had a variety of feelings on the current political arena.

"Even though Pennsylvania is a Democratic State, I really disagree with Kerry and I want to put in my vote for Bush," said Tim Perkins, ME BD 05.

Tony Diplacido, CWRIT 05, wasn't yet sure who his vote was going to.

"I'm really indecisive at the moment and I feel like everyone is for one party or the other. I feel that arguments for both candidates are a little off though. I want to find out more about each one and pray on it," he said.
