Behrend's club walks for Alzheimer's

By Chris Brown
staff writer

This past weekend the Penn State Behrend Psychology Coalition participated in the Alzheimer's Walk to Remember. It took place at Glenwood Park, located off Glenwood Park Ave, behind the Erie Zoo.

Participants in the walk met at Glenwood Park early Saturday morning to eat a complimentary breakfast. Over 200 people were in attendance. The 5k walk snaked itself through the Erie Zoo, around the neighborhood, and back to Glenwood Park.

Once the event was over, participants enjoyed free food, a DJ, and the chance to win door prizes. Also, everyone that participated was allowed free admission to the zoo for the day.

Many participants had family members or friends who suffered from Alzheimer's Disease (AD). The disease affects over 4.5 million Americans and is commonly associated with elderly. It gradually destroys a persons ability to learn, reason, make judgments, and carry out daily activities.

There is no known singular cause or cure currently available. AD is also the leading cause of Dementia in the elderly, a combination of other conditions that slowly deteriorate one's mental functioning.

The disease not only takes a toll on those afflicted, but also their family and friends. People who suffer from AD require a great deal of care.

People were encouraged to raise money by having other people sponsor them or by sponsoring themselves, though a donation was not required. Many people walked to show their support for a good cause. If you couldn't make it to the walk but still want to make a difference, the Alzheimer's Association Homepage has information about donations and other ways to get involved.

The Psychology Coalition at Behrend is a combined group of Psi Chi members and members of the Psychology Club. Despite being one of the smaller groups at the walk, they were able to raise over $1,300.

Psychology Club President Megan Miller said that, "it is nice to see that we can really make a difference as college students. We were able to raise the fourth highest amount despite only 15 members participating."

This is only the first of many activities currently in the works for the Psych Club at Behrend. A free depression screening for students is currently being planned. No date or time has been decided as of printing. The Psych Club is also face painting at the Erie Zoo the night of October 19th for Zoo Boo.

Anyone interested in participating or joining Psychology Club can go to one of their meetings. The meetings take place every Thursday evening at 6 p.m. and in Psych Lab at Lawrence Hall. All majors are welcome.
