COMMUNITY SERVICE

Greener Behrend task force cleans up Four Mile Creek

Students from Ann Quinn's environmental science class cleaned up at 4 Mile Creek on Sept. 19 as part of their class's ongoing commitment to helping the environment.

MIKE O. WEHRER
news editor

On Saturday, Sept. 19, 12 Behrend students from Professor Ann Quinn's environmental science class volunteered to help clean up 4 mile creek as part of the Greener Behrend Task Force.

Quinn said that there has never been a dearth of students in the 3 years Behrend has been doing the clean up.

"We've had more students in the past, and we decided that 12 was the best number to use." Quinn said "half the students went up the creek to clean, half go down."

According to their website, the mission of the Greener Behrend Task Force is to "develop and implement strategies and related programs for campus practices and policies that further ecological sustainability within the college community."

Their goals include: reducing energy use and promoting cleaner fuels, using water in a conservative and respectable manner, minimizing solid and liquid waste, increasing the healthfulness of food and reduce its waste, protecting natural areas, and incorporating "green" practices into the construction and renovation of facilities.
