Construction continues...

The Metzgar Center is scheduled to be air tight by Christmas. One of the workers (left) gets ready to tie down new walls of the building. The interior work of the building will be done over the winter season. The framing for the roof is completed and was done on time.

Construction workers (above and far left) do the last steps of completing the roof for the new building.

"Construction is going great, some problems with the progress of construction occurred but nothing major," said Ken Miller, Director of Student Affairs.

The stone surrounding the Metzgar Center (right) has been done ahead of schedule. Due to the good weather in Erie the stone work was completed this fall. It was originally scheduled to be done during the Spring of 2010. "There was risk that the cold weather may affect the mortar used in forming the stone wall around the building," said Ken Miller, Director of Student Affairs. Since the progress of the construction is going smoothly, furniture has already been ordered and will be available on time once interior work the building is complete.
