SGA appoints Supreme Court

ADAM FRACASSI
managing editor

SGA has finished appointing the new members to the Supreme Court. The court consists of five members that were all nominated by the president of SGA. The court has many different functions across campus, but mainly works with student organizations and deals with any grievances filed either against or on behalf of the SGA.

According to their Constitution, the Supreme Court deals with any breaches of the SGA Constitution, or any rule or policy for the student constitutions or University policy. The main function of the Supreme Court is to preside over appeals brought after the SGA renders a decision.

"If the SGA makes a decision on something like removing a club or removing a candidate from the ballot and the club or candidate wanted to appeal the decision they would go to the Supreme Court for that appeal," said SGA President Steven Burger.

Each side would then argue their cases in front of the Supreme Court which is made up of mainly non-SGA members making it an impartial organization.

The five new justices are lead by Chief Justice Caleb Rodgers, and include Connor Sattely, Alternate Chair for the Supreme Court, Rachel Reeves, Michael Bilz, and Jason Golbieski, with each serving a one year term.

All of the Justices will be taking an oath at the SGA meeting next Wednesday, Oct. 20 at 5 p.m.

Behrend aims to expand to 7,500 in next 5 years

TASHIMA MITCHELL
staff writer

It's huge, it's wide, will it work? Behrend's plans for the future are vast and seemingly endless.

The administration has a goal of reaching 7,500 students within the next five years. Planning will be done with the help of the curriculum task force members, the SGA Academic chair, the committee and a couple of students.

They are going to take a look at Behrend strengths and weaknesses and also student's needs and interests.

"The plan is to get more students, and with that we need more programs in place," said the associate dean, Dr.

David Christiansen.

Some examples of the new programs could include kinesiology classes, digital media, game design and development. Also, there are hopes to adding more education degree programs such as science, history, and English, which could be an addition to our math degree program. He is even considering elementary.

"I am thinking about also having more online classes and having block schedules that allow students to take a course within a course," said Christiansen.

There are currently 4,694 students enrolled in Behrend. In the past five years, enrollment has increased by 25 percent.

"We have had a variety of additions that have helped increase with enrollment," said Christiansen.

In the past five years, the Burke Center was created, new faculties, residential halls: such as Senat Hall, 550 new beds in University Gates and the nursing program.

"I think these plans will absolutely be a success," said Christiansen. Chancellor Birx has a vision and with our enthusiastic faculty we will be successful, but it will be a lot of work."

Those who will see Behrend in five years might be shocked and pleasantly surprised, only time will tell just what Behrend has in store for its students, faculty and staff and the community at large.
