

PSB students involved in accidents

Alcohol influence possible in separate weekend car crashes

TOBY KELLER
Staff Writer

Two Penn State Behrend students were allegedly involved in multiple accidents on campus early Saturday morning, possibly due to alcohol. The two students, whose names were not released, were not seriously injured.

The first crash occurred on Old Station Road, past the Junker center, in the early hours of Saturday morning. The second incident occurred around the same time on campus in the banana parking lot.

Pennsylvania State Police did not have a report on the incident and Penn State Behrend Police and Safety have not yet released information in regards to these wrecks.

Things at a local party went from euphoric to terrifying in a matter of minutes when the neighbors complained about the excessive and irritating noise level. The police appeared at the house and quickly quieted things down, according to one partygoer.

"The cops came into the house, they knocked and we let them in," said Thomas Gillespie, an undergraduate Behrend student. "They came in the front and back. Then they gave us a little bit of a lecture, they were pretty cool about it."

One partyer drove towards campus in a black car, nearing the Junker before allegedly putting his car into an embankment, says Gillespie. The driver allegedly fled the scene and the car was impounded by authorities, he said.

"So he tanks that sign, backs up, goes up into the banana lot and slides right down by the suites," said Gillespie. "State police came and took him to jail for the night."

Since there have been no public reports on the incidents, Gillespie's claims could not be verified as of press time. Other witnesses at the scene claimed that the driver was travelling at "recklessly fast" speeds.

The party went downhill when the landlord of the house received phone calls from surrounding neighbors.

"We threw down a little too hard this weekend," Gillespie said. "When they were doing chants in the garage, I was standing in the doorway looking down. Everyone started singing 'oi oi oi' and I looked across the crowd and saw a dozen or more Four Lokos."

"The house got kinda fucked up that night."

Pennsylvania State Police will release information on one or both of the accidents later this week.

As of press time, Penn State Behrend police also did not have a release available. This information may become available in the coming weeks.

MOVIES

Get a student-conducted preview of the seventh Harry Potter movie, "The Deathly Hallows."

Page 12

SEX

What's okay to experiment with in bed? This week's "The Crave" lets you in on some options (and prices).

Page 8

HUNTING

Check out the debut of Behrend's first ever hunting and fishing column by James Wade.

Page B2