Possible Penn State Tuition Hike Coming

The costs of a higher education are going higher and higher, and the support from the state is not acting favorably in response to this acceleration of costs. Tuition is going up again at Penn State, at least by $15 a term-more probably the raise will be $20-$30 term. University President John W. Oswald also proposed reducing operating costs of all University programs and restrictions on hiring new faculty University members will take place. These measures are all being taken to compensate in part for the overfive million dollar increase in costs lacking in the appropriations proposed by Shapp.

The appropriations stated now by Gov. Shapp at $83 million are only tentative, and the hope is that we are granted that much. With the strict budget desired by the legislature which is lower than Shapp's proposed budget by $175 million, and the tax cut desired by Shapp, the funds for higher education will be hard to get. Penn State is not the only school struggling for financial balanced—many other schools are in competition for funding. In fact, only one school in the state was granted an increase in appropriations in Shapp's proposed budget.

Along with the financial difficulties facing the higher education institutions, the student is meeting the problem of paying for part of the expense not being met by state appropriations. Nixon has proposed a new plan for financial assistance to students in which the aid is given to the student rather than the institution. The theory is that the increase in aid to the student will compensate for the raise in tuition. More students will be entitled to aid, but students will more than likely not receive as much as previously offered to one individual. The Basic Education Opportunities Grant, (BOG), a to half of the total expense of education, $1,400, but the student four year team. Our frustrating and or his family will have to accept the responsibility for the balance of the cost. The program now in existence, the Education Opportunity Grant (EOG), and the National Defense Student Loan (NDSL) will probably be eliminated.

Possible solutions could be offered by writing to members of the legislature. Perhaps institutions of higher learning should learn to cut down their own budget and progress at a slower rate. New and old programs should be heavily evaluated as to their worth in proposed budget funding. Internal analyses of the institutions must be made in an attempt to cut down in all possible areas. The student should not have to absorb the additional expenses, and efforts in protest can be directed to the legislators. The Student Government Association and the Joint Residence Council are attempting to voice the opinions of the students and are working through with the entire Penn State system. Give them your support.

Letters To The

Dear Editor,

Congratulations to those enlightened individuals who realized that one of the better places to advertise for potential RA's was in the men's room of Niagara's lobby, and placed their advertisments accordingly; specifically above the urinal at eye level and on the back of the stall's door, also at eye level (if one happens to be seated that is).

I'm sure we Behrend students can look forward to similar manifestations of brilliancy when next year's RA's are selected!!!

Dan Milewski

Dear Editor, As a member of the cheerleading squad, I would like to express my pride in Behrend's basketball team. Because Behrend lacks the funds to offer scholarships and recruitment our team is composed of boys interested in playing basketball. The cooperation displayed among the members throughout the part of Nixon's plan, will pay up season has added a special quality of maturity to the new loss to Alliance serves to illustrate my point.

Although the scoreboard in dicated a four point loss, Behrend's team won in other aspects of ball playing. The tension created by the spectators was reflected in the players but Behrend had more poise and outplayed Alliance in attitude if not skill. Under the pressing circumstances, our bovs responded as a team and impressed me and many others with their self-control and spirit.

The Behrend basketball team may have a losing record but they a winning team. Congratulations are in order to each member of the team for their outstanding efforts.
