

Pollution

technology by 1983.
5. To insure that point source effluents are limited, each source must obtain a permit which specifies the limitations to be achieved and the measures that must be taken to demonstrate that it is being achieved.

The government is doing their part in the battle against water pollution, but every American citizen must also do their part to insure proper results in the form of clean water in the United States.

Listed below are several ways that individuals and groups can help with this problem.

1. Inform yourself. Read newspapers, books, pamphlets, magazines... Watch for TV coverage.

2. Take a look at where you work or where you attend school. Are they working on new methods or processes to improve the problems?

3. At home, use less water in areas of lawn sprinkling, dishwasher use, cold water from the refrigerator rather than from the tap. Even use less water in the bath or shower.

4. Join a group that is already working on water pollution problems. Watch your local newspaper for reports of meetings or names of officers.

5. Build interest in water pollution problems within the groups you already belong to.

6. Observe your community's rivers, lakes, or streams, the sewage treatment plants, the local waterworks, and find out first hand just what the problems are.

7. Keep well informed on how your legislators vote on water pollution control bills. If not pleased with their actions, contact them and express your views.

8. Know the law. Report violations. Be a little more concerned with our water problems.

Violations can be reported to the Erie County Health Department.
