Excavation Of Sewer System Continues

By Ron Leonardi

Excavation for Behrend's new $425,000 dollar sewage system is currently proceeding on schedule, according to Mr. Robert Finley, Assistant Director of Operations.

The project, which is one of the largest undertaken at Behrend in recent years, is a combined effort between Penn State University and the Harborcreek Township Sewer Authority. Penn State's projected share in the project is $369,000.

According to Mr. Finley, the project has been developed over the past three years. "We have tried to have this project done for the last ten years and have been trying to get rid of that sewage plant," said Finley.

Behrend's current sewer system is overloaded, and besides an expansion which took place in 1971, has been the same since the college was built.

Furthermore, the system provides a danger to the environment. "It does provide a source of pollution to Four Mile Creek, no matter how well it is run," said Finley.

Workers are proceeding on schedule despite having to put up with some fierce weather conditions the past few weeks.

Mr. Finley anticipates the start up of the new system will occur on April 5th or 6th. Final grading and restoration on the site will take a month and a half beyond that.

This project is very complex and is not restricted to the campus alone. "There is a lot to this project that you don't see," he added. The project involves pipe line running from the Nick building across campus which everyone is aware of.

As of this writing, workers were in the process of tunneling under Station Road. The state highway commission refused to allow the road to be cut. After Station Road, there is 3500 feet of main pipe line which will be installed to the Gospel Hill Country Club.

From there, the line makes a left turn up Steimer Road, then across Reese Road and finally connects to the sewer system at the top of Freeman Road.

Mr. Finley feels the new system offers Behrend many advantages. "The new system is going to allow the campus to eliminate the sewage plant, the operational problems associated with it, and the degradation of Four Mile Creek," he said.

"It's going to give us more capacity to allow the expansion of the campus. It has been a major reason why this campus has not been expanded."

Major Changes At Behrend

Three new programs have replaced the old at the Behrend College campus of Penn State.

New majors in business economics and general business were described to the Board of Trustees recently by Dr. Edward D. Eddy, provost of the university. A revised major in political science, featuring four options, was revealed also.

"These new programs reflect the college's awareness of the changing educational and professional requirements of students," Dr. Eddy noted.

The major in business economics replaces the current bachelor of science program in economics.

The major in general business, leading a bachelor of science degree, is offered to students who want a thorough background in several fields in addition to business administration. It features exposure to foreign language, social science and communication.

The major in political science has been revised to include four options - all leading to a bachelor of arts degree. They are: government administration, international and comparative politics, public law and general political science.

The government administration option covers the impact of public policy in American political life and the operation of bureaucracy. Students may complete work in that option through an internship in the Erie area.

The International and Comparative Politics option will familiarize students with political processes in other societies.

The public law option will address the function of public law in the American political system. The nature and limits of international law, and the role of the Supreme Court, will be covered extensively. Dean Lilley said this option will probably replace the current pre-law offering.

The general option is designed to provide flexibility for students to adapt the curriculum to individual needs and interests.

The new programs and options at Behrend all can be put into effect without additional faculty members or university funds, Dr. Lilley said.

Nationally Acclaimed Poet At Behrend

Poet Tess Gallagher will visit Behrend Thursday, February 4, to present a reading of her works.

Ms. Gallagher has been on the faculty at Syracuse University for one year. The list of magazines in which she's published are extensive, notably The New Yorker, The Atlantic Monthly and The American Poetry Review.

Her first collection of poetry, entitled Instructions to the Double was well received. Stanley Kunitz said of Ms. Gallagher that she "is truly an exciting poet, of vivid speech and bold dramatic imagination." The New York Times Book Review said she is "clearly one of the brightest talents of the '70's."

Her second poetry chapbook was Under Stars, published by Graywolf Press.

Ms. Gallagher comes to Behrend having finished a new film which she helped write. Following Behrend, she will continue visiting colleges throughout the Eastern United States.

Ms. Gallagher's visit is funded by a grant from the Mary Behrend Cultural Series. The reading will begin at 8 p.m. in the Reed Lecture Hall. Admission is free to the Behrend community.

"Almost Anything Goes" Almost Doesn't Go

After two postponements due to the weather, the almost anything goes competition, sponsored by the Volleyball Club and the Greenwood Beer Distributor, was held Saturday, January 23. With a grand total of 2 teams participating and a group of 10 enthusiastic onlookers, most of which were the people running the competition, the 1½ hour marathon of events began.

These physically demanding events would take their toll on the participants. Fatalities included three pairs of sweat pants, two pair of socks, and a lifesaver that broke when it hit the floor in the surprise event. The events testing the endurance of the teams included a frisbee throw, football toss, find your shoes in the pile, beer can balance, and thread the needle.

When asked to comment on the competition, a member of the winning team said, "I wish they would have let us empty the cans of beer, it would have made the competition more interesting." A member of the losing team said, "That's the best I've ever done, I'm proud, we came in second."

The winners will go on to further competition to be held at Gannon University around February 20. They will compete against the other colleges in the area. We wish them luck in their pursuit of the gold.
