Pottorf Strikes for Perfection

by Rob Roth

On April 2 Rich Pottorf did what most bowlers only dream about; he bowled a perfect 300 game.

When most average bowlers get into the seventh and eighth frames of what has been to that point a perfect game, they usually succumb to the pressure, but Rich Pottorf did not. "It wasn't easy once I reached the latter frames, but I kept my mind on the game, I really concentrated," Pottorf said.

The intra-class tournament, which took place during physical education bowling class at Eastway Lanes, is unfortunately not officially sanctioned by the American Bowling Congress, but it will be remembered by all people involved.

Many spectators watched the last of the 12 strikes in a row. Karin Sobotta, class instructor said, "I got to Rich's lane after the second strike. The lanes were in real good condition because they had just been oiled, and Rich just stayed very relaxed."

Pottorf is known locally as a consistent bowler averaging in the upper 170's, but this was the first time he had ever come close to a 300 game.

There is incredible pressure to overcome in bowling a 300 game, and when asked how he felt when he saw the last pin drop Pottorf responded, "I felt great, I was really relieved."

Bowling a 300 game has not, however, guaranteed him an "A" for the class as Sobotta tongue in cheek mentioned, "I want him to do it one more time so I can be sure it wasn't a fluke."
