

Christmas Bazaar captures the holiday spirit

by Karen Pastorik
Collegian Staff Writer

Holiday events are planned for the annual Christmas Bazaar held Dec. 2-4.

Sponsored by the Inter Club Council, these seasonal activities allow clubs to have fundraisers that benefit everyone. Clubs will be selling Christmas cards, hats, posters, baked goods and more. Even Erie's less fortunate will share in the joy by the canned food drive.

Student related activities range from a decorating contest among the residence halls, to music performers, a choir concert, ice skating, shopping trips to the mall, and a dance. More symbolic customs are included such as an Advent service, and the Hanging of the Greens ceremony which shows appreciation of the contributions of the Behrend family. Caroling at Wintergreen Gorge to the site of the Behrend's grave is a tradition unique to Behrend that demonstrates the spirit of giving and receiving at this meaningful time of year. Resident students interested in decorating halls should do so before Thanksgiving, because judging will take place on Dec. 4.

Ronette Green, president of Inter Club Council, had this to say about upcoming events, "Each club came up with their own ideas for the week of activities... none is restricting them... same with commuters, it's important that they are able to be involved in the campus happenings... for instance they are welcome to choose a neutral part of campus like the Reed building to decorate in order to participate in the decorating contest with the resident halls." She added that a full calendar of events with more details will be displayed on a divider similar to the calendar that was up during alcohol awareness week.

Screen Talk: Arnold at home as "Commando"

by T. McGee
Collegian Contributing Writer

I'm convinced. Arnold Schwarzenegger actually has the ability to speak coherent sentences with a hint of emotional activity. I didn't think it was possible but Arnold's new film, "Commando", dispels the old Schwarzenegger image of an iron-bodied idiot.

The old Mr. Universe plays a retired commando who lives in the mountains with his young daughter. The pair is assaulted by a group of power hungry terrorists and the young girl is kidnapped with the promise that she will be returned if Arnie carries out the assassination of a third world politician.

Needless to say, our boy is not pleased. After disposing of the nasties assigned to make sure he does his job, Mr. Muscle begins a non-stop rampage during which he kills bad guys with everything from rocket launchers to machete blades.

The final showdown is especially violent, though not offensive since director Mark Lester keeps us feeling as if we're viewing a very graphic, yet friendly, cartoon.

The script by Stephen E. DeSouza is almost fast-paced enough to make us forget about it's improbabilities, but several clumsy plot incidents are unforgivable.

For example, Schwarzenegger is supposed to be our nation's top undercover spy, yet he drives a stolen bulldozer through the front wall of a sporting goods store in order to steal weapons and ammunition. If all of our spy's were that secretive, Poland could steal our Star Wars blueprints.

Meanwhile, amidst all of the carnage, Arnold is joined by Rae Dawn Chong (daughter of Tommy "Cheech and" Chong) as a flighty stewardess requisitioned by the Man to aid his cause. Her charming sense of humor keeps the film from taking itself too seriously and her alluring beauty sets off Arnold's ruggedness nicely.

As a whole, this film seems to have just the right character tone for Schwarzenegger. The role is not as simplistically campy as "Conan: The Barbarian" nor flat and overbearing like "The Terminator". As for his competitors in the shoot-em-up market, Arnold will never be as hammy as Stallone's "Rambo" or as cerebral as Eastwood's "Dirty Harry"—but he can be just as entertaining.

Congratulations Mr. Schwarzenegger, I think you've found a home.
