

Student Voice: "What do you think of vehicular traffic on the walkways during class change?"

Some students voice opposition to vehicles travelling on the walkways to classroom buildings during change of classes. The "Student Voice" posed a variety of students with the question, "What do you think of vehicular traffic on the walkways during class change?"

Joanna Robson

Joanna Robson, 7th semester, Human Resource Management: "It makes me really nervous because there are so many people walking that you end up running into each other. It's hazardous to my health and all student's health. When it's a rainy day, the backwash splashes my clothes especially when I'm wearing a dress."

Chris Downey

Chris Downey, 1st semester, Human Development: "I don't think it's a big deal for the students. It's probably a pain for the people driving in cars because they have to wait a while for the people to clear."

Amy Kurtzhals, 3rd semester, Marketing: "I think when classes are letting out, especially in winter, that the vehicles should let the students have the right of way. Vehicles should have a different route."

Amy Kurtzhals

Angela Bucheral, 4th semester, Accounting: "There's only ten minutes between classes. I think there should be another time when they could travel through the walkway. Unless there's an emergency - - that's understandable."

Tim Hall, 3rd semester, MIS: "Security does not enforce speed limit on the walkways which annoys me because it's dangerous to students who are unaware of traffic approaching from the rear. If students must park in the parking lots and walk to class, I feel the faculty should too."
