"They fired you, didn't they?"
 "Why do you keep saying that?"
 "I told you you should be a little nicer to the foreman. It wouldn't have broken your face if you'd have laughed at his dumb jokes once in awhile. Well, if they fired you, they fired you; what can we do? I'll get a second job, that should help us get by."
 "But if you have two full-time jobs, that puts us back where we started. What about our relationship?"
 "Jacob, we don't need a relationship. We have three children."
 Kindred spirits, McEnroe and my grandfather. As it turned out, my grandfather never did leave the mill. Every time he got a little ahead, my grandmother would blow it on another pair of shoes for the kids.
 But if he'd had McEnroe's chances, he would have laid out. So would I, for that matter.
 I wish McEnroe the peace in his relationship that has eluded him in playing tennis.
