Church Group Exposes IRS

Seattle, Washington (CPS) -- A small, sometimes controversial church group is trying to expose the Internal Revenue Service as a "corrupt inefficient bureaucracy."

The editors of Freedom magazine, published by the Church of Scientology, have compiled and released "The IRS Papers."

The Reverend Steven Heard, Pacific Northwest editor of Freedom, said that the editors hoped that the publication of their study would lead to congressional investigation of IRS policies.

In a forward to the 'IRS Papers,' the scientologist accused the IRS of using secrecy as a "one-way street" in its dealings with taxpayers in order to protect itself from criticism.

The secrecy also makes it possible, according to the editors, for the IRS office to apply its standard according to shifting standards.

Heard singled out several of the findings from the bureau's documents.

The editors also accuse IRS of withholding information from Congress and the Central Accounting Office.

Big taxpayers settle tax disputes with IRS for a lower percentage of assessed tax than do small tax payers, the papers said.

"By IRS policy, the papers reveal any taxpayer automatically unknowingly and without his consent, waives all rights to the confidentiality of his tax and financial matter should he communicate with his congressmen or with the media about his difficulties with IRS."

Heard contended that IRS was more concerned with its own image than with applying tax laws uniformly.

Heard and his fellow editors claim to be an apolitical group. The attack is upon the IRS and not the administration that the IRS is a part of.

"We attach no political significance to this publication," the foreword said, "Our motivating belief in the freedom and dignity of the individual is born of religious conviction."
