

C C Cookery

"Creative Campus Cookery," a 350 page cookbook compiled by the Faculty Women's Club of Capitol Campus is now available. The completed book contains the favorite recipes of each of its contributors who represent the entire Capitol Campus community as well as local and nationally known personalities. Its contents range from appetizers and beverages, to breads, salads, soups, main dishes, vegetables, desserts and candies. It also includes gourmet recipes and those of varied ethnic origin.

All proceeds from the sale of the cookbook go to the Student Scholarship Fund. The cost of the cookbook is $3.50 (plus $.21 postage if necessary) per copy. Books can be ordered by sending your check or money order made payable to CCFWC (Capitol Campus Faculty Women's Club) to: Mrs. Charles Hary, 21 Heatherland Road, Middletown, Pa. 17057. Please include your name and complete address.

****

Patt says Bye-Bye

The desks in the various offices at Capitol Campus are filled and vacated with unusual speed. One desk in the Office of Student Affairs was occupied by Ms. Patt Brooks. She was a secretary for Mr. Jerry South and for all the students who needed her help. Now, she is no longer with us.

Patt has many reasons for leaving, but one major reason was the unpleasant atmosphere that she encountered daily. Most of her co-workers shared different philosophies and constantly impressed their lack of intolerance for new ideas. Patt is now searching for a more open and easy going atmosphere.

Ms. Brooks has several other personal reasons for leaving and has decided to make her new home in State College. Many of the students returning to Capitol will feel regret for her loss. We all wish her luck in her new home and with her new friends.

Expansion of Evening Programs

An expansion of the undergraduate evening program at Penn State's Capitol Campus was announced today by Dr. George D. Wolf, Dean of Faculty. Initiated last fall with courses offered by the Division of Administration and Business, this program is being enlarged to include courses from the division of Humanities, Social Science and Education. Prior to last fall, only graduate level courses were offered at Capitol Campus in the evening.

They are open to any individual who has the equivalent of at least two years college credit. Persons also may qualify by satisfactorily scoring on the College Level Entrance Examination Program (CLEP).

Courses will be scheduled on a regular basis in the evening and students may also take daytime or Saturday courses to fulfill degree requirements. These courses also are available for students who seek enrichment and wish to select certain courses on an adjunct basis.

Students who find it more convenient to attend classes after 5 p.m. may now take a variety of language, humanities, music, business, American Studies and _____ courses leading to degrees in three fields: Bachelor of Business Administration, Bachelor of Humanities and Bachelor of Social Science.

Administration and Business courses to be offered in the evening include: Behavioral Application, Insurance I, Marketing Management, Macroeconomics Analysis, Introduction to Math, and Advanced Math.

Oil Painting, Basic French, Forms in Music, and Western Tradition I (Greek and Roman Culture) will be offered by the Humanities Program.

Social Science and American Studies Program offerings include: The American Colonial Experience, Cultural Geography, Accountability of Public Bureaucracies, America & The Future of Man and Human Services Seminar.

Registration for these courses will be held on September 24-25. Additional information may be obtained by writing or calling the Office of Admissions, The Capitol Campus, The Pennsylvania State University, Middletown, Pa. 17057 (787-7734).

****

Graduate Programs

A new graduate program in Psychosocial Science featuring a Community Psychology option will be offered at the Capitol Campus of The Pennsylvania State University. It will begin on a part-time basis in September, 1973, and a full-time schedule will be available, September, 1974.

Dr. George D. Wolf, Capitol Campus dean of faculty, said the purpose of the new offering is to equip students with the necessary skills to cope effectively with the multi-faceted problems facing contemporary communities.

It is designed, he explained, to enable students to recognize problems, to outline and implement possible solutions, and to evaluate the effectiveness of suggested solutions.

A major portion of the program which was developed by Dr. Robert W. Colman, Dr. James L. Knestruck, and Dr. Kathryn L. Starkey is field work under the supervision of a faculty member. It leads to a Master of Psychosocial Science degree.

Students usually will be placed in such agencies as mental health centers, child care centers and other such community service centers. It is expected that placement in less formal facilities such as community action centers and storefront crisis centers also will be possible.

The practicum work will take place in the context of a nine-credit course usually taken over three terms. The experience will be supplemented by an on-campus seminar discussing problems encountered in the course of the work.

Students completing the program will be prepared to enter the field of psychosocial services and work in human service agencies.

Working within state and community agencies, their major functions will be planning, implementation and evaluation of programs with goals of upgrading these agencies. Working with community groups, the graduates will have the ability to evaluate present status and promote effective change.

While the program's immediate goal is to train individuals who will be directly involved in the delivery of services, students could go on to further study at the doctorate level.

Thirty-three credits are needed to complete the program. Students must complete a master's paper which will be part of their practicum experience in a human service agency.

Detailed information on the program may be obtained by contacting Dr. Irwin Richman, Chairman of Social Science Programs, The Pennsylvania State University, The Capitol Campus, Middletown, Pa. 17057 (787-7732).

****

MORE

Penn State's Capitol Campus will offer graduate courses in the Master of Administration program at facilities located on the Franklin and Marshall College campus during the coming academic year.

Dr. Robert J. Brown, Program Chairman, announced that this extension of the graduate program which has been offered at the Capitol Campus in Middletown for the last six years is being initiated as a convenience to citizens in the Lancaster-York area. It will afford local students the opportunity to satisfy a portion of the graduate degree requirements with a minimum of travel. To a limited extent courses will be open to nondegree students.

The first course to be offered will be Administration 520 - Administrative Models which is a required course for the fulfillment of the Master of Administration degree. Another graduate course will be offered during the winter and spring terms.

Applications are currently being accepted for the fall term. Registration will be held Monday, September 24, at Capitol Campus. However those who have previously been accepted to the graduate school may register by mail.

The first class will meet Thursday, September 27, and subsequent Tuesdays and Thursdays from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. for the ten-week term. Tuition for Pennsylvania residents is $99 for the three-credit course.

More information may be obtained by writing or calling the Office of Admissions, The Capitol Campus, The Pennsylvania State University, Middletown, Pa. 17057. (717-787-7734).

****

XGI KEGGER

Lower Swatara Fire House

Friday, October 5 9pm-1am

(maps available at roundtable)

Photo Club

Meeting

Monday October 1

8pm

at the lab

rear of

Placement Building

BLACK EXPRESSION

UELEZO

WEUSI

WA WATU

