

Nagel Exhibit Now In Lounge

A collagraph exhibition of prints by Stewart L. Nagel is now being shown in the Gallery Lounge of Penn State's Capitol Campus till February 15. The exhibition, which is open to the public from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, is free.

Presently an associate professor of graphic arts at Bloomsburg State College, Nagel will be offering a course in printmaking and graphics at the Capitol Campus during the Spring Term which begins March 22.

He earned a bachelor of fine arts from the Cooper Union, a Master of fine arts from the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, and has done additional post graduate work at Hunter College.

Nagel is the author of Collagraph Printmaking: A Study of Process and Form and has produced, directed and edited a film on the subject. He has lectured at the Smithsonian Institution and Howard and George Washington universities.

Nagel's works have been exhibited in major galleries in the east and many are in private collections in New York City, Washington, D.C. and Philadelphia.

STUDENT TEACHERS IN PANAMA

Cheryl Cohn and Carol Matter are student teaching in the Canal Zone (Panama) this term along with several other student teachers from the Park. Carol writes:

"I am almost a teacher! I have a red marking pen; doesn't that qualify me? This wonderful pen was given to me by Coco Solo Elementary School to mark papers officially in red.

"The schools have an overabundance of supplies and materials available. My only complaint is the Social Studies program for primary grades. The series they use (when and if they do) is from 1958! Horrible textbooks! Their big thing down here is reading. They just changed over to Lippincott and all the teachers are complaining about getting used to a new series.

"The kids in my class are from all over the States. Also, they've traveled a bit if their parents are in the military. They're great resources for a unit - Children of the World.

"We'll be thinking of you 'Stateside' people as we swim in the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans."

Their address is: P.O. Box 102, Margarita, CANAL ZONE.

ATTENTION MARCH GRADUATES

Anyone expecting to graduate in March and has not received the letter about graduation, please see Jane in W-129 as soon as possible.

The date of graduation is Saturday, March 16 at 1:00 in the Middletown High School auditorium.

Letters

Dear Editor:
 It's three a.m. in the middle of a very rough night and I just found an old copy of the Reader underneath my mattress. My question: what happened to Agamemnon O'Brien now that will need him?

In arms,
 Elmo the Thud

XGI's

Vietnam veterans hospitalized at the Coatesville Veterans' Administration Hospital had their lives brightened Saturday, January 26, by visits and entertainment provided by members of the Chi Gamma Iota (XGI) fraternity from Penn State's Capitol Campus.

Approximately 20 members of the local veterans' organization delivered more than 2,000 paper back books and magazines to the hospital which will help fill many hours for the patients in the weeks to come. Cakes, cookies, and donuts baked by fraternity members' wives brought a touch of home to the men, also.

Special entertainment was provided for the men by Richard Little, a Hatboro magician engaged by the local fraternity.

FACULTY - STUDENT RAP

by Fred Prouser

A small group of students and faculty members held a rap session sponsored by the Head Shop on Monday, January 21.

The session was informal and one of the opening thoughts expressed was why we are in college anyhow. Some people held that they were here to prepare for a job.

This was countered by Ed Beck with the fact that the average person changes careers five times during their lifetime. Several students agreed that they were here solely because they wanted to have a learning experience and just the simple fact to better themselves as people.

The purpose of college was kicked around a bit. If college is primarily to prepare the student for a job, couldn't a technical school do just as well a job in a shorter period of time and in an inexpensive way? Those that still chose to go on to college would do so because they desired to further their knowledge, not necessarily to insure a high paying job.

The business field was taken as a particular example in this case. For one person, the knowledge gained at a community college and subsequent work in the business world seemed to provide an adequate background to obtain a job. When they came back to school, it seemed a repetition of previous work and more emphasis on theory than on practical applications.

Mr. Dressler brought up the concept of in loco parentis, or the university as parent when the student is away from home. The style of housing on campus is decidedly different from many schools in that the school operates both dorms and individual houses for students.

This distinction brings on varied problems not dealt with at many schools. Problems such as destructive vandalism and drug abuse were brought up as examples of the dilemma facing the administration.

Once the 18 year old rights bill is passed in its entirety, the student will be held in account for all his actions and the responsibility will be off the university's shoulders.

Dr. Eisenstein was concerned about the lack of involvement colleges and students have with the world around them.

The basic issues of the day are seldom integrated into college policy or student action. The consensus of those involved was that the individual was the one most likely to get involved in the world situation on a one to one basis, with interaction among fellow students.

Dr. Klein brought up that Capitol Campus needs some direct community involvement if it is to remain a viable force in the years to come.
