To Smoke, Or Not To Smoke

In the October 18th issue of the CC Reader a concerned student expressed his opinion about smoking in the classrooms. Due to the deadline date for publication it was too difficult to respond in last week's Reader. What it seems to boil down to is that there are no standing enforced rules against smoking. Controls are voluntary and can be done on an individual or classroom basis depending on the extent of concern. A student could confer with his classmates, instructor or both to have (1) smoking banned for the class period, or say, for the first 3/4 of the period so that nicotine fanatics would not feel discriminated against. (2)

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

We at the C.C. Reader deeply regret if any articles you've handed in haven't been run. We plead with your sense of fairness to please realize that we do have space limitations—due largely to the lack of funds, which means we can't print more than eight pages at a time. If, because of this, something you labored over for long hours doesn't make it to press, please don't come storming into our office ready for blood. We do the best we can, and we are beset with many hardships. Ads must get in to help defray publishing costs, so some articles may get cut-out. But we do try to run all articles sent to us, even if it takes a few weeks. So, please, give us a hand and realize that we all must make some sacrifices. Thanks, the Editors.

All cigarette smokers sit to the far side of the classroom, either by the open windows or open door. (3) Have smoking days and non-smoking days. (4) Any combination of the above. If there is enough concern over this matter, a vote could be taken by the entire student body as suggested.

Smoking does make some people ill. Perhaps before lighting up in a classroom, non-smokers should be taken into consideration. This would alleviate the problem do to the innate goodness of the human species. Talk to each other
