Consumers clutch purses

University Park—Consumers are holding on to their money this winter, but they'll be "tempted into" spending it on such things as housing and cars later in the year, predicts a banking authority at The Pennsylvania State University.

Dr. David H. McKinley, associate dean and professor or banking emeritus in the College of Business Administration, says that while four segments of the economy—housing, automobiles, and appliances, business inventories, and business purchases of plant and equipment—look bleak now, things will get better.

"The good news is that consumers have started to save in a big way," he says. "These savings are going first into repayment and reduction of consumer debts, and later into savings in banks, savings, and loans, and securities."

"The effect by mid-1975 will be a revival of housing, which was the first GNP segment to collapse two years ago. By the end of 1975, consumers will be tempted into buying new cars by heavy discounts, higher trade-ins, and improved gasoline economy. Businessmen react fairly quickly to business inventory surpluses and this should be a problem of the past by the end of the year."

Here are some other findings and observations of Dean McKinley:

Total economic output, adjusted for inflation, has now dropped from an $846 billion annual rate in the fourth quarter of 1973 to $804 billion in the last quarter of 1974, a drop of about 5 percent. And a further decrease of nearly 2 percent is on the way.

—The President and Congress should support immediate improvement in corporate profits if they
