A Cat's-eye View

by I. Luv Katz

I found the following story (letter?) still in my typewriter one recent afternoon on my return from school. Funny thing is, the only inhabitants of my house when I'm out are my three cats:

I understand that you (and other cat owners) think you are indispensable to us, and if it weren't for you, we wouldn't have a place on this earth. Well, honey, let me tell you, you're way off-base! There are only a few things that you really do for us, and they are way out of proportion with what we cats do for you.

All you have to do is feed us, change our litter boxes, and take us to the doctor's when you think we're sick. And those few things, believe it or not, do keep us happy. On the other hand, it'll take a lot of space to detail what we hard-working felines do for you spoiled humans.

In order to keep you happy, we have to play with strings, attack things that aren't there, and do all sorts of other silly things just so you can laugh and constantly squeal "isn't that cute!" in our sensitive ears. When you're lonely or just want to do something with something, who is it you go and disturb out of a sound sleep? You guessed it - us! You jolt us of our comfortable warmth and pick us up and start rubbing us and expecting us to purr. Have you ever tried purring when you're still half-asleep? It ain't easy, believe me.

Anyway, if we don't feel like purring, or can't clear our throats in time, you think we hate you, or some other stupid thing like that.

Then sometimes we'll find a bathroom that's more suitable to us than that gravel-pot you like us to use. When we use it, you get very unreasonable and use violence on our delicate bodies. I mean, really! We always take the trouble to cover it up, and yet you still get angry. I just don't understand why it upsets you so.

Well, back to how we benefit you: You'd probably freeze to death on these cold winter nights without us to sleep with you and keep you warm. And where would you snap-shot photographers be without us to take pictures of? We always provide you with apt subjects. Like the time I was asleep in my food-bowl and you sneaked-up to me with that awful bright light and woke me up. In times like these, I'm sure every cat would like to take a big chunk out of that human's hand.

All I'm really trying to do is plead for a little understanding as well as love. Put yourself in our places. After all, we're always there when you need us.

Well, you'll be home from school soon, and I wouldn't want to startle you by having you see me using your writing-machine. I'd hate to think of all the fuss you'd go thru.

Olson Revealed

by Gary B. Macchioni

Hello friends, my name is Gary, and I write the Jimmy Olson stories. It was never intended that my identity remain secret, for all my friends know that I am the person behind Jimmy. Please don't be offended by the material in the stories. I never intentionally planned to cut-up any person or group. Perhaps I'm just taking an absurd look at absurd situations. If we can't laugh at ourselves, what can we laugh at? In the process, I must respect everyone's free will and philosophies--and you must recognize mine. But, if you call me "blasphemous", or say that my material is "trash", then by all means, SHOVE IT!!! Gary B. Macchioni doesn't miss a trick.
