Conversation With The PARK

"Daily Collegian. May I help you?"
 "Ah, yeah. Hi. My name is Douglas Gibboney and I'm with the C. C. Reader..."
 "The CC what?"
 "Reader."
 "Rider?"
 "Reader. C.C. Reader."
 "As in Weekly?"
 "Yeah, something like that."
 "Okay. C.C. Reader."
 "Yeah, that's the Capitol Campus newspaper and I..."
 "Capitol Campus?"
 "Of the Pennsylvania State University."
 "Yes, we are."
 "So are we."
 "Huh?"
 "So are we. We're an upper level campus leading to B.S. and Master's degrees."
 "Oh, a branch campus."
 "Right but we're the final two years."
 "Gotcha."
 "Okay. What I'm calling about..."
 "Is this long distance?"
 "From Harrisburg - well, Middletown."
 "We better hurry then."
 "No. This is a WATS line."
 "Oh, good. What's new?"
 "Jesus, you don't seem very busy for a daily paper."
 "Eh, the wire service does it all."
 "oh."
 "So what's new?"
 "Um, well the reason I called..."
 "Hey, wait a minute! I just pulled the file. The name of your paper is the Capitolist."
 "No."
 "No?"
 "We changed it."
 "oh?"
 "Yeah."
 "When?"
 "Shortly after Nixon got re-elected."
 "Smart move."
 "We thought so."
 "I'll change your card."
 "Thanks. Anyway, the reason I called..."
 "HEY!! Capitol Campus! You guys are the ones with the skin pictures in your yearbook, aren't you?"
 "Um, yeah..."
 "Could you send us a..."
 "We didn't have too much to do with that at the newspaper."
 "Oh, you couldn't send..."
 "No."
 "Okay. So what do you what?"
 "Well, the reason I called is about the journalism workshop in November?"
 "Workshop?"
 "The one we got a notice on a couple weeks ago."
 "Oh. I don't know a whole lot about that. Maybe you could call later when more people are here."
 "When's that?"
 "About midnight."
 "Okay, later."
 "Later."

Reed Speaks

when a university or college is faced with a monetary shortage the burden is first passed onto the student in the form of higher tuition and cutbacks in student employment. The institution itself is the last to feel the "crunch".

He wants to make it clear that this was the only reason why he voted for the $5.5 million amendment to the deficiency appropriation for public institutions on June 3.

He stresses that the passage of this amendment is not precedent setting and that, "I have no intention of engaging in this practice on an annual basis."

Mr. Reed said that it is "nonsense" if the colleges and universities in this state think they'll get their money through deficiency appropriations next year at this same time.

Representative Reed said the governor's effort to revamp and review through the Businessman's Taskforce the manner in which a lot of our colleges and universities are operating is long overdue.

Mr. Reed feels that now more than ever there is the need for a good liberal arts education. In order for the individual to best confront the "new frontier" of our cities, he must achieve, with the help of a liberal arts education, "compatibility to the socio-economic environment."

The 26 year old politician feels that politics seems to be one of the last ways in which young people choose to tackle the flaws in our social system, and yet politics is the area that influences all facets of our society.

Representative Reed has been involved with politics since age 15 when he founded the Teenage Democratic Movement. He was the president of the student bodies of Bishop McDevitt High School and Harrisburg Area Community College.

He currently serves on the House Health and Welfare Committee, the Law and Justice Committee, and the Urban Affairs Committee. He is also the chairman of the Crime Prevention Task Group and is an active member in numerous community affairs.

Nittany Lion Gets Upset Over Pitt Invasion

On Saturday, April 12, the Pittsburgh Panthers invaded Penn State Nittany Lion Country for the Blue-Gold game at Hershey stadium. The Nittany Lion (Paul Skodacek) was upset and counterattacked the Pitt thrust with a dozen of Blue & White supporting fans, including the Stompin' Cheerleader, Al Kerchner, and a portion of the Cotton Bowl Regiment featuring Mr. Coors himself, Gid Wray.

A small segment of the XGI Fraternity group paraded the inside of the field with signs following their leader, Mr. Nittany Lion. Pittsburgh's representative cheerleaders were put to the test as the Lion Country cheerleader called or screamed out counter-cheers, and eventually embarrassed them off the field.

For some unknown reason, the area where the Penn State fans were seated became more and more vacant as the game progressed. But maybe it was because this group was really hot! So hot that in fact Mr. Wray was called from the stands to attend to his van, which was surrounded by big red trucks and men wearing funny hats, boots, and coats. It appears that Mr. Wray's "Perfect Sleeper" was sending smoke signals to Coach Paterno!

Needless to say, everyone there had a great time and the XGI Fraternity made sure that Pitt knew that they were in Lion Country.

When I grow up, I want to go to Capitol Campus. They throw the best rock concerts around.

What do you want now, Fred!?
