

Lecture Set On China

Dr. Chad D. Hansen, assistant professor of Asian Philosophy at the University of Pittsburgh, will talk and show his slides of Mainland China this Saturday at 7:30 p.m. at the Unitarian Church of Harrisburg.

Dr. Hansen has spent five years living and studying in Asia and recently traveled for six weeks in the People's Republic of China with a group of Asian scholars. He and his group visited both rural and urban areas of the country and had the opportunity to meet and talk with the late Premier Chou En-lai.

A graduate of the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Dr. Hansen speaks two dialects of Chinese plus Japanese. He also lectures on various facets of Oriental Philosophy including Confucianism, Taoism, Zen Buddhism and Mao Tse-tung thought.

For more information or reservations contact Roz or Dave Powell at 652-7379. Tickets may also be purchased at the door.

P. S. U. Now No. 11 Nationwide

The Pennsylvania State University has moved from 13th to 11th among the colleges and universities in the nation in fulltime enrollment and continues as 12th in grand total enrollment.

This is reported by Dr. Garland G. Parker, of the University of Cincinnati, in his annual survey prepared for the American College Testing Program. It is the 56th year for the national survey.

Hippert Gets Scholarship

Provost Robert E. McDermott has announced that Jacob Hippert is the third Capitol Campus student to be the recipient of the Renaissance Scholarship award for the 1975-76 academic year.

Hippert, a mechanical design engineering student is currently in his 11th term. He has maintained a high grade point average in accordance with the Renaissance Scholarship requirements. In addition to his studies Hippert works part-time on campus for the Recreation Athletics office.

A native of Pittsburgh, Hippert attended the New Kensington Campus of Penn State before coming to Capitol.

More 'Star Trick'

Shlock's universal translator and he's speaking in Vulcan.

Capt.: "I'm on my way."
Scene: Sickbay

Capt.: "What is it Bones?"

Dr.: "I wish you'd stop calling me that. How would like it if I called you Bligh?"

Capt.: (SIGH) "Alright Doctor, what's wrong?"

Dr.: "Shlock must be speaking in Vulcan. And something must be very wrong with his universal translator because it sounds like he's propositioning Nurse Chappel."

Capt.: "You must be joking."

Dr.: "You should know me better than that; I only joke in the final scene."

Capt.: "What do you think you're doing Shlock? Let's get over to engineering and get your translator repaired."

Shlock: "Back off Captain, before I pinch your neck."

Nurse Chappel: "And that won't be the first thing he's pinched today."

Capt.: "This is very unvulcan of you. Let's get that damn thing fixed."

Shlock: "Captain, it is most illogical for you to assume that any exhibition of a sexual nature on my part is due to the malfunction of Starfleet equipment. If Vulcans did not engage in sex, the survival of the Vulcan race would be most inexplicable. Just because these things do not occupy my every waking hour does not mean I enjoy them any less than you. Further more, Nurse Chappel seemed to be enjoying this. So, if you would return to the bridge."

Capt.: "I will not have my first officer running amok on my ship. Now here are my orders...."
CRASH!!!
Capt.: (OVER INTERCOM) "Mr. Sala..."
Sulu: "SULU, CAPTAIN!"
Capt.: "What the hell has happened?!"
Sulu: "Er.. We seem to have crashed into a planet's moon sir."

Capt.: "Be more careful in the future Sulu, do you have any idea what the insurance premiums are on one of these things!?"

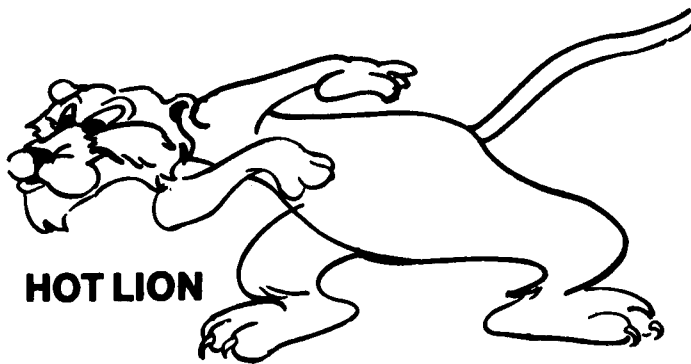

Shlock: "At present, the monthly payments on an early model MK IX Heavy Cruiser are around $14,747,352,172.50."

Capt.: "Thank you Shlock. Sulu, one more mistake like that and that will come out of your pay!! Is the planet Class M?"

Sulu: "Yes sir."
Capt.: "Good. Shlock, organize a landing party, and Sulu, get Scotty to repair the collision damage. I'll risk not reporting this one. Jerk out."

Shlock: "Later Nurse Chappel, duty calls."

Capt.: "To the transporter Shlock."

Thumbs Down On Schools

(CPS)--America's love affair with its public school system is over.

Only 13% of American adults would grade their local schools "A for excellent"--a 30% drop from five years ago--a recent national survey conducted by the Ford Foundation has found.

Many of the adults who voted thumbs down on public schools were recent graduates from the public school system. Only 6% of the 18-29 year-olds and 9% of those who have recently attended college gave the schools a top rating, a fact which the survey report termed a "warning signal" to schools.

Top on the list of dissatisfaction was 'lack of discipline,' followed by 'bussing,' 'lack of financial support,' 'poor teachers,' 'large-sized classes,' 'poor curriculum,' and 'crime.'

More than half of those sampled would like to send their children to a special school that maintained tight discipline, a strict dress code and emphasized the three R's.

The survey report did not indicate which age group supported stricter schools.

Commonwealth Day Planned

Students transferring from one of Penn State's branch campuses to University Park will now be able to observe the main campus' facilities in advance.

A USG sponsored "Commonwealth Day" will offer branch campus students a chance to "see what the University looks like and what it has to offer," according to Howard Olshansky, director of USG's Department of Branch Campuses.

Olshansky said many transferring branch campus students do not realize the many opportunities for enrichment available at University Park. Commonwealth Day, an extension of the Ambassador Program, will expose the students to programs and activities, he said.

Olshansky said all branch campus students will be invited to University Park on February 14. That morning they will hear presentations from the Organization of Town and Independent Students, the Association of Residence Hall Students and both the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils.

That afternoon, tours of dormitories, apartments and fraternities will be offered to assist the student in choosing living accommodations.

Following the tours, the agenda calls for the students to meet with representatives of the University's colleges and leaders of various student organizations.

The day will end with a concert or jammy, Olshansky said. He emphasized that any branch campus student can attend Commonwealth Day, which, if successful, would become an annual occurrence at University Park.

Bulletin boards are being organized for your convenience. To assure the full utilization of all boards, the Student Affairs Office has assigned students to keep the boards organized. Your help is needed!!!

Location of boards-- Ride board-basement level; Cultural and Social Program board-1st floor landing and throughout the building; For sale board-at round table and by the bookstore; Organization News and Meetings board-1st floor west wing.

Any questions call 787-1681 and ask for Roberta.

Artist's Work
