New Woman's Mate

been assumed to be at my instigation. "Women don't act like that." Sue has never been blamed for influencing my actions. After all, doesn't a husband always tell his wife what to do? "After all men have a better mind for these things don't they?"

Sue and I do talk about many items of campus concern, but we also try to keep out of each others balliwick. We are both individuals, and we want to keep and we jealously guard our own personalities. It's a far cry from the traditional relationship. But then our personalities aren't stereotypical. I'm the emotional one and she has the cool, even icy (when provoked), analytic mind. At home I design the curtains and she fixes the tractor.

If a number of our colleagues, faculty and administrative have trouble understanding our relationship, our local tradesmen are confounded by it in spades. The plumber or the tractor repairman always wants to explain the niceties of French drains and gasoline filters to me. They were bemused when I referred them to Sue--and now they gravitate to her if not instinctively, gracefully.

Our Lancaster county neighbors also have trouble with our relationship. A man who owns a farm next to our property wants to trade some land with us--let's talk, among ourselves" he remarked "women don't understand these things." In the meanwhile, Sue calculated the square footage of the land in question and corrected his measurements. He grudgingly had to admit, although not in words, that "man to man" is not necessarily the best way to solve problems with the folks next door. Acquaintances always compliment

Sue on the flower arrangements (always mine), the color schemes (usually mine), and the food (sometimes mine). Friends know better.

People are often non-plused when they telephone and ask for "Dr. Richman" and we answer "which one?" Usually they want me, not "Mrs. Richman."

Accepting women with titles requires adaptation. Knowing how to treat husbands of professional women also leads to awkward situations. How do you treat a shadow?

Learned societies like ordinary citizens often stumble when they try to adjust to the new situations. Many organizations no longer have "Wives Programs" at their conventions--they have "Spouses Programs". Brave! Now! Free! Right? Well, how come they all seem to feature fashion shows?
