

This Moon Is Misbegotten

(CPS)-

The controversial, self-ordained Korean evangelist Sun Nyung Moon is planning to add the Empire State Building to his growing list of American real estate holdings. According to the Christian Science Monitor, Moon's Unification Church hopes to buy the New York skyscraper—once the world's tallest building—by next year. The Moonies, who already own about $20 million worth of property in the U.S., also plan to start a daily newspaper in New York City, sometime next year, the Monitor reports.

But, despite Moon's financial rise in this country, Moon's followers were terming his scheduled appearance at a rally on the Washington Monument Grounds in Washington, D.C. this past weekend as his final public appearance in the U.S.—at least for quite awhile. Facing growing opposition in this country, Moon plans to begin concentrating his efforts on a new drive to spread his movement to Europe.

Part of the reason behind Moon's decision to concentrate on Europe apparently stems from the U.S. Immigration Service's current campaign to deport about 600 of his Asian followers. Immigration officials recently ruled that Moon has been bringing Asian followers into the U.S. not for religious training, but to sell goods and make money for his organization. Most of those scheduled to be deported are expected to move to Europe for Moon's new recruitment drive there.

As for Moon's weekend appearance in Washington, the U.S. government has estimated that it will cost American taxpayers about $120,000 to provide security and clean up the Washington Monument grounds after the rally. Moon, of course, repeatedly has been linked to the oppressive South Korean CIA and has been eschewing a right-wing political line for the U.S.

Harrisburg Police

The Harrisburg Bureau of Police Officers feel strongly that a better promotion policy, and more training for new recruits and members of the Bureau, are among ways police feel will improve their productivity.

These conclusions are indicated in the results of a survey of 52 members of the Bureau, conducted by the Pennsylvania State University's Institute of Public Administration.

The officers interviewed gave "Fair and equally administered promotion policy," an average rating of 8.5 on a scale of 1 to 10, the highest average rating given to any of the 21 productivity improvements presented to each interviewee. "More in-service training for officers" received an average rating of 8.4.

Three other factors, "More basic training for new recruits," "Concentrating more on the problem of crime and less on the provision of individual services," and "Better equipment, e.g., radio scramblers", received ratings of 7.6, 7.8, and 7.7, respectively.

Among the productivity improvement factors presented to each officer were several relating to the patrol operations of the Bureau. Officers did not rank patrol-related improvements highly.

"Greater proportion of the Department on foot patrols" was rated among the lowest of all 21 factors by patrolmen and by officers with street-related assignments.

But when officers were asked to take a Harrisburg resident's point of view in ranking all 21 productivity suggestions, the need for more foot patrols emerged as the most important factor. Sixty percent of those interviewed picked this factor as being among the top three from a resident's perspective.

Officers also were asked to list positive and negative effects of changing from two-man to one-man patrol cars in Harrisburg. Seventy-five percent of those interviewed felt that the negative effects of such a change would outweigh positive effects. The main negative effect, making up 56 percent of all reasons offered against the change, was that one-man cars would be unsafe for police patrolmen.

The report notes that although the findings are based on interviews with roughly one third of the Bureau's sworn officers, the findings are not necessarily a mandate for making policy changes. However, officers' selections of certain productivity factors as having high potential should be viewed as a basis for policy discussions within the Bureau, since they reflect common concerns of most officers interviewed.

The survey report, written by James C. McDavid and David N. Allen, of the Institute of Public Administration, is entitled "Perceived Opportunities for Improving Productivity in the Harrisburg Bureau of Police," and is part of a continuing education project of the Institute in the College of Liberal Arts, conducted in cooperation with the City of Harrisburg.
