If There Were A Nuclear Plant On Tenerife

By Ayam Knewman

The crash of a 727 jet airliner into Three Mile Island late last night may cause "major realignments in geography" according to an electric company spokesman.

A new lake will be named Lake Middletown in honor of the late borough's demise, according to a highly placed source in the Department of Environmental Resources. The lake will cover the estimated 100 square miles contaminated by the "highly improbable, nearly impossible" crash.

The future "water recreation area" will be made possible by the creation of a dam 30 miles downstream of the former power plant facility. The dam will be financed through an extra fuel readjustment charge on utility bills.

State and industry spokesman are optimistic about the future recreation potential of the lake. Guidelines for the 286,000 year plan are already being developed. By that time, according to Mortimer J. Snerd, "advances in recreation technology alone could make this lake a tourist bonanza for Central Pennsylvania, Maryland, and parts of New Jersey. Why, just think, Cro-Magnon man stepped out of the caves a mere 75,000 years ago.

Imagine the advances that we can make in the next 286,000 years. And all the new species of fish and game that may develop due to the slightly higher-than-normal radiation background level could make this the trophy capital of the world. Yes, we are leaving a scintillating heritage for future generations to enjoy."

No local residents could be found to comment on the plan.

According to Defense Department estimates, Lake Middletown will be safe for human recreation by the fall of 297,972 A.D.

The six-pack from last issue's contest is awarded to Barry Rickert, 11th term Bus. Adm. He captioned the picture: "Doug Henning's younger brother 'Houdonit' performing his famous feat of lifting an invisible bottle of Sangria with his eyes closed." (By the way, Barry's was the only entry.)

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph and Mary of Nazareth became the proud parents of a baby boy here today. They have decided to name their package from heaven Jesus in honor of Joseph's favorite baseball player Jesus Alou of the San Francisco Giants.

President Idi Amin has refused to deny reports that he is negotiating with the Horizon Corp. of America for the sale and development of Uganda. When this reporter questioned Amin on the matter, he replied, "Duh ah bogga bogga, fuck you".

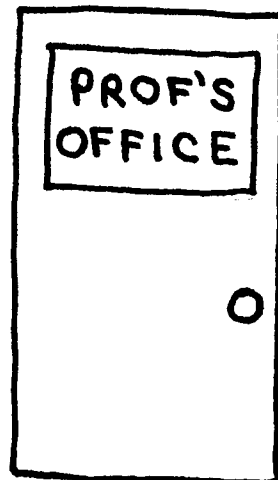

Dateline Washington. The Supreme Court here today has ruled out brain death as reason for replacing a sitting president under the 25 amendments. This decision grew out of a case brought by former Vice President Rockefeller. The ex-veeps' lawyers tried to have then President Ford removed from office as incapable of performing his duty. As proof of Ford's brain death they offered the record of his three years in office. Chief Justice Warren "Big Mac" Burger wrote the 5-4 decision.

Perrone's Mushrooms

By Julio Alvarez

Ed Perrone, Associate Editor of the C. C. Reader, was discovered yesterday wandering naked down Route 230. Middletown Police, who apprehended Perrone, said that at the time of his discovery, he was kneeling by the roadside attempting to eat the gravel. When questioned at the stationhouse by police, Perrone could say nothing except, "Well yeah, I, uh, well...wow, man, wow."

It is suspected that Perrone took a large dose of LSD shortly before the incident occurred. He has been released in the custody of his French poodle.

"QUIT SAYING APRIL FOOL AND UNLOCK THIS $### DOOR!"

The above picture, has recently been awarded by the New York Museum of Art Curator, Harry J. Smut, the Classic of the Times Award. In his release, Mr. Smut mentions photography as the 'true art form of today' and was totally impressed with the 'ethereal quality' and 'vivid portrayal of society's awareness of the beauty which surrounds them'. The picture is to be hung in the main lobby where it will be admired by all who enter the building.
