(A-P)- (Cambridge, Massachusetts)- Two Massachusetts Institute of Technology coeds have created a campus furor by publishing a "Consumer Guide to M-I-T Men." In the publication, they rated the sexual performance of 36 male students by name, awarding each from four stars to none.

M-I-T President Jerome Wiesner has denounced the guide, which appeared last month as a full-page article in the student newspaper Thursday.

More than 200 M-I-T students have signed a petition protesting the article as a "very cruel commentary on a very sensitive issue."

The story, illustrated with a cartoon of a naked couple, rates the men and includes descriptions of their technique, physical attributes and personal hygiene.

It was written by M-I-T juniors Roxanne Ritchie and Susan Gilbert, who said they based the ratings on personal experience.

Miss Ritchie said that her intent was to show how women feel when "expected to perform for men."

Weisner called the article "extraordinarily offensive and a gross violation of our norms of taste and of regard for privacy." Writing in the administration newspaper, he said the article has prompted the university to review the status of Thursday as a recognized student activity.

Miss Ritchie said publication of the story has earned her obscene telephone calls, a dousing with beer at a party and threats of gang rape. She said two copies of the story in the accredited newspaper had been sent to Miss Gilbert's parents.

"I tried to contact all the people on the list to apologize for it being in print and to say 'that's not what was important to me when I was with you,'" said Miss Ritchie.

Thursday issued an editorial apology May 5th to all those whose names were used without permission. But it said the publication "will not be censored by anyone at any time."
