Registration blues

by jeff drinnan

Student ought not complain about the system of registering at Capitol Campus. While they may not realize it, some administrative big brother has instituted policies in the student's best interests.

Once upon a time, there was a chaotic mass of students. Out of this chaos, Capitol gave order by creating the line. No longer were students to roam the halls aimlessly now that they were given direction.

Seeing the line of students winding around the circle in the main building and winding down the hall towards the bookstore and around again towards the library is an awesome sight. The procession to register moves right along with-out so much as a bell and a "hurry please, it's time."

It's hard to believe people don't like spending a good part of their afternoon hanging around outside the records office hoping to get the courses they want. I suggest they think about the times a cop kicked them off a street corner for loitering.

The state of Pennsylvania has made many gamblers happy by taking gambling off the street and dirty pool halls and into our grocery stores where they belong. Now loiterers should be elated, since they are not only allowed, but encouraged to loiter here at Capitol Campus.

One is reminded, upon seeing the sinuous lines outside the records office, of how thorough registration can be. Every stone is unturned. Take I.M. Notsobright, a typical student, for example. His entry may read: I.M. Notsobright, son of M.I. Notsobright, half-brother of Attila the bun, cousin to van dig-a-dong-a lampost Smith, an 8th term business major; a degree student, race one-hundred yard dash, likes dogs and goes to keggars and hopes to graduate some day, of Middletown.

The greatest asset from registration is waiting for hours only to discover all your courses have been closed. This builds character.

Capitol's system of registration helps students find their place in the scheme of things. Charles Darwin may very well have been thinking of Capitol Campus when he coined the phrase "Survival of the fittest". At Capitol, the species who can tolerate the environment, especially registration, are the ones who survive and propagate a race who infest Capitol's environment. All other die out.

Let's all pray that Capitol Campus students don't become an endangered species.
