response-You're not safe anywhere. Probably, because I don't have anything to hold me down, I don't really care about TMI; I see it as a necessary evil.

Response-Yes. The atmosphere contains particles which are pollutants to people. The additional radiation I am absorbing doesn't frighten me. (Besides my film in the darkroom room hasn't fogged-yet.)

response-Yes. Since I live within a ten-mile radius of the plant, I don't feel in any more danger coming to the campus. The radiation being emitted now is minimal in comparison to what I've already been subjected to, so it's a little late to worry.

response-From what I have learned and heard I don't feel I am in any immediate, potential danger from being exposed to such small amounts of radiation, considerably less than the average person might be exposed to from other sources over their lifetime.

response-I don't feel completely safe. The danger isn't over and won't be over until the monster is back under lock and key--a cold shutdown. I also don't know how the people responsible will get the lethal material out of a dangerous area and put it in a safe place. If I hear of another outburst of radiation like the one on Friday, a week ago, I'll make a beeline to my car and do a three minute mile, if needed.

Opinions at a glance

In light of the recent accident at Three Mile Island--from which radiation is still being emitted--do you feel safe here at Capitol Campus?

response-Yes, I feel safe at the present. However, the aspect of danger is constantly with us in everyday life. No matter if it is Nuclear Radiation or chemical spills.

response-Yes, the levels I measured around the University Apartments are quite minimal and the biggest danger was over before anyone was notified anyway.

response-I feel more intimidated by some of the faculty and staff than by Three Mile Island.

response-Yes, I feel safe. I also feel safe driving down the Schuylkill Expressway at 5 p.m. on Friday afternoons.

response-As we have stated, radiation levels are minimal and well below the safety level. In fact, I've been on the scene since the accident and have been exposed to the low levels all along and I feel fine!

Litany of the Soul

Excerpted from: This Ritual

I am tired of the formaldehyde taste of the morning,
I am most heartily tired,

I am tired of pissing blood after each overdose,
I am most heartily tired,

I am tired of using women I cannot touch,
I am most heartily tired,

I am tired of afternoon bars with broken lives,
I am most heartily tired,

I am weary of the distance that keeps me alone,
I am most heartily weary,

I am tired of the guilt.
I am tired of the fear.
I am tired of the frustration.

I am tired because I cannot pray.

Bitch

Wouldn't it have been nice if instead of a phone booth (?) in Suda City they would have installed a change machine so I could stop pestering the women in Vendorville, and Res and Derrick for quarters and dimes?
