

Excuuuuuse us!

The Reader would like to apologize for the somewhat messy appearance of the words in this issue. Just one more proof that ya just can't count on those damn machines.

We sincerely hope that this technical problem will be corrected by the next issue. If we can't get the mechanic from Philly here before then, don't be surprised if you find the halls cluttered with strange looking mechanical objects some coming along with non-sensical graffiti covering the walls. There might even be a Reader staff member or two running around spitting fire and grabbing at anything in reaching distance. Frustration is hard.

You can certainly expect The Hand to say something about this, if The Hand ever comes out of the air conditioning vent (The Hand is trying very hard to remain cool over this appalling affair).

But, right now, we'll all just optimistically assume that the machine will be working in order for the Reader to bring flawless (stop your laughing) future issues.

By the way, we've changed our minds (oh, we know it's gutsy), about coming out weekly. There just isn't enough time and (believe it or not) money available for us to put out a substantial weekly Reader. We're a bit disappointed (we'll get over it) as we're sure you are (you'll get over it), but we can all count on the Reader presenting exciting, and some slightly offbeat articles that'll make you switch off that Prism or Home Box when you realize that the C.C. Reader is out.

At this time we plan to publish the Reader every two weeks. So if you have some articles, stories, poetry or artwork you'd like published, get it into the Reader office on a Monday. Also (there's just so much to say) There's gonna be a terrific meeting tomorrow at 3 p.m. in the Reader office. Hey, this is not your average meeting. Our meetings are dignified and classy --we will serve cider and donuts. So even if you don't want to be part of our somewhere-between-Monty Python-and-Time-Magazine-staff, but have some suggestions (now don't be grim) stop in and munch and chat munch and chat *□□

Emission petition

Editor:

I would like to call to the campus communities attention that there is a petition being circulated requesting that students, faculty, and staff not be committed to classes during the time of radiation emissions (October) from Three Mile Island.

Low level radiation is dangerous to ones health. The campus community should not be required to risk their lives.

Petitions will be circulated by the Round Table, and in Meade Heights and the Dorms. Every signature is necessary.

Bitch

I can't believe the outrageously exorbitant price of food at the Vendorville grill. At least, if these prices cannot be lowered, the quality of the s... served should match the price asked.

Heights of life

Woback for turning students. And new students, glad to have you with us.

I am residing on campus and have been watching people moving in all week now, filling up the rooms and houses, turning them into our different tastes and personalities.

Once empty with no expression, our rooms are now colorful with pieces of each of us, making the places we live become more than just a room or a house.

From all over the state, and other states, we come to inhabit Capitol Campus, forming a community with which we have to live and cope.

This year will be a good one if we all unite together for the benefit of us all.

That old cliché, strength in numbers, is true. The Meade Heights is at capacity and things are starting already.

The dorms are also filling to capacity. The campus is very much alive. All around activities are underway.

The mood is started, are you in on anything? There are things to do to get you out of your rooms and houses. Just don't sit around and bitch, do it! Get out and get involved. It's our campus. It is here for us. Take advantage of it.

Your interaction with organizations and clubs will not go unnoticed.

Check this column in every issue of the Reader. I'll be keeping up on what everyone is doing; specific events, situations and people will be highlighted in this column.
