COMMENTS: This is really not a bar but could be a great college pizza-Italian food parlor. Definitely a munchie place (sorry we got lazy this week). Mon. - Thurs. the place closes at midnight. Fri. - Sat. it closes at 2 a.m. Jeans are OK and beer is $1.90 a 60-oz pitcher.

Let your fingers walk

Once upon a time, I was lying on a desk in the library, minding my own business and checking out palms of the opposite gender. All of a sudden, one of the library workers flipped the lights off in my section. That plunged me into total darkness. I wanted to yell at her, but that's kind of hard to do when you don't have a mouth. So I crawled on my knuckles and fingertips to a point below the light switch my fingers do the walking over to the annex and found the appropriate volume. Then I proceeded to the check-out table.

Taking pen in myself, I filled out the autobiography they call a check-out card and handed it to the lady. But, alas, I had never gotten the Fall '79 sticker attached to my ID card. After the worker gave me the third degree, I laid myself on a stack of Bibles on the wall. I couldn't dig my fingernails into the wall deep enough to climb up. Fortunately, the librarian soon came along and--after almost stepping on me --turned the lights back on.

After recovering from that near-miss, I remember my original purpose for coming to this chamber of horrors. I needed a book on manicure. (I have to take care of myself since I'm the only one of me I have!) After thumbing through the card catalog, I let and swore I was a student here. I didn't really see the need for all that hassle. I mean, after all, how many hands are seen around campus without bodies attached? To make a long story short, she finally let me carry the book out.

I was so mad I could have clenched myself and put me through the wall. But I fought back the urge. We hands are discriminated against enough already without having me tarnish our reputation.
