Room For Improvement

By Bruce Burns

Already in the works for the next season is the possibility of a field for the Lions on campus. The lack of a true "home" diamond to compete and practice upon hurt the team this year, and the development of such a field on campus should be the top priority of all concerned. In my involvement with the Athletic Department here at PSU-Capitol Campus this year, I have heard a great deal said by administration officials about improvements of intercollegiate athletics at this institution. Well guys, this would be a great place to start. Let's give our baseball team a field they can practice and play on which will not only improve the standards of the baseball program, but upgrade the overall intercollegiate athletic picture of PSU/Capitol. Everyone talks about building up athletics here, but no one acts accordingly. Now is the time!

Students Surveyed On Adequacy Of Advising

By Harry H. Moyer

In the beginning of May, the Faculty Organization Committee on Student Affairs conducted a survey to study the academic advising program currently being used at Capitol Campus.

In order to get information from all parties involved in the advising process, the committee decided to survey students, faculty and program heads, and then compare and contrast the responses across the three groups.

The committee's intentions were to conduct the survey scientifically by using 50% of the student body.

There are valid reasons why the committee chose to survey only 50% of the students instead of everyone.

Editor's Note: This will be the last issue of the C.C. Reader for this term. Publication will resume on a bi-weekly basis at the beginning of the fall term.

A small survey is easier to control. When only statistical results are desired, it is not necessary to sample the whole group. For example, the Gallup poll would be impossible to conduct if it were necessary to survey the entire population of the United States.

The committee only made one mistake. Selection.

Although the survey is probably representative of student thought, there are students who resent not being one of "the chosen few." The selection process was controlled, no doubt, but it is not clear whether students not among "the chosen few" can present responses to the committee.

In other words, in addition to a statistical survey, it would be appropriate to also distribute half-sheet pages asking for students to give their opinions.

The response will not be phenomenal, but at least everyone will be able to have a chance to speak up. Who knows, maybe one of "the rejected few" will have an idea that is new and worthwhile.

It's certainly worth a try, isn't it?

Letters to The Editor

Editor,

Twice a year the XGIs sponsor the Hershey Blood Bank visit to campus. This time it will be held on Tuesday, June 3, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in front of the Main Building. We are hoping for another successful drive for the Blood Bank.

The Fraternity considers the Blood Drive as one of the most important campus activities held throughout the year. Blood received in these drives is credited to the Capitol Campus XGI Donor Organization and we can release the blood to any person in need of it. Donors automatically become eligible recipients of the XGI blood bank's full donating power if the donor or any relative should need blood.

With aid from the Capitol population, past blood drives have been extremely successful and we thank you for that. At the same time we ask for your continued support in order that this drive will also be successful.

Try to be a donor on Tuesday, June 3, and inform others of this drive and encourage them to support this activity.

There will be a sign-up sheet posted in the Nurse's office for scheduling purposes. Also, coffee, juice, and donuts will be supplied by the Fraternity for your refreshment afterwards.

Thank You,
William F. Busher
Blood Drive Chairman

Editor,

Currently, there is a survey being conducted to obtain students' opinions of their advisors in the Business Department. Did you know that? There are a large number of business students who, I am sure, do not. The reason? The survey is being conducted with selected students and if your name is not on that list, you have no chance to formally voice your opinion on the advisement services you receive.

Personally, I am outraged! I have one of the lousiest advisors on campus and would greatly appreciate the chance to let this fact be known. However, my name is not on the "selected" list of students so my unhappiness goes unheard.

Are you one of the people whose name is not on that list? Do you have an opinion about the so-called advisement services offered in the Business Department? Then let your voice be heard!

I am sick and tired of being bypassed—especially when I am one of the students who is very displeased with the counseling that I "haven't" received!

We, as PSU/Capitol students, are what this institution is all about. Why is it that only some of us are important enough to be heard? P.S. This applies to all the other majors as well.

Editor,

Hi again there, gang! Did ya miss me? Well I sure missed you. Actually Harry and I have been trying to straighten out some policy interpretation and the publishing of this letter, plus some of the others accrued over the last couple of issues, should be a sign that Harry, in his infinite wisdom, has made the right decision. Way to go, Harry.

Anyway, enough said about my absence. It's the end of the year and what does the end of any year usually signify?...You guessed it...Awards. You've heard of the Tonies, the Oscars, the Grammys, the Emmy's, the Olympic Gold, well here come the IMFy's, Sorry folks, that's the best I can do.

Now most of you probably think that the IMFy is a supercilious ego-centered testimonial to yours truly. No such luck, bunky. The IMFy's are awarded each year by the International Ministry of Foolishness.

So... on with the show... the envelope, please.

The first annual Wish You Were Here IMFy is awarded in absentia to Drs. Duane Shuttlesworth and Don Sugai.

The Wish You Would Still Be Here IMFy is awarded to Lem and Yvonne.

The Don't Go Away Mad, Just Go Away IMFy goes to their bosses.

The Silk Purse Out Of A Sow's Ear IMFy goes to Minister of Propaganda Dorfman.

The Father of The Year IMFy goes to Dr. Posatko.

The Mother of the Year IMFy goes to Dr. Towns.

A special Bromo IMFy is awarded for years of deserved merit to Vendorville.

The What Me Worry? IMFy to Dr. South.
