

Dr. Ken Varcoe, Assistant Vice-President for Student Affairs for Branch Campus Liaison and Coordination, talks with students at PEEC.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LOWLY SLIDE RULE

UNIVERSITY, Ala. (CH) -- Environmental groups are formed to save the California condor, the great whale and the baby seal. But one lone student is working to save another well-known species from extinction.

University of Alabama graduate student Will Jordan is striving to save the slide rule, that once invaluable instrument now rendered virtually obsolete by the pocket calculator. Jordan's personal collection includes 60 slide rules, all given to him by friends or purchased at bargain basement prices from bookstore owners anxious to unload their remaining stock.

Jordan doesn't expect his slide rules to become valuable and admits they're not particularly nice to look at. His main concern is that "nobody thinks about them or wants them anymore."

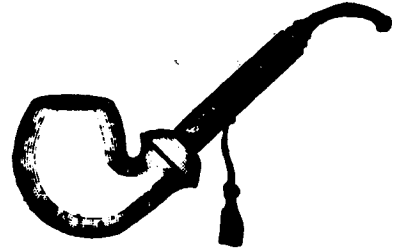

That bothers Jordan, who says he grew up with slide rules as the son of an engineering professor and used them as an undergraduate in mechanical engineering. So while others forgot a trusted friend that needed no batteries, at least one student remembers.
