TARNHELM NEWS

The first meeting of the Tarnhelm staff was held in the Gallery Lounge on Veteran's Day with six students and two faculty members attending.

Topics addressed at the meeting were evaluation procedures for art and literary work submitted to Tarnhelm, fund-raising ideas should the magazine need more pages or copies, faculty submissions, advertising, a theme for the magazine, and a schedule for reading meetings during the winter term.

Five of the six students at the meeting said they would like to write for Tarnhelm and three said they would be interested in reading submitted works and making decisions on the magazine's content.

They bring to total to 12 persons interested in writing and five who would like to be evaluators. Three others also said they would like to submit art and photos to Tarnhelm.

The SGA approved the 1980-81 Tarnhelm budget by a unanimous vote in a recent meeting. The budget figure they approved will pay for 500 copies of 32 pages each on high-quality paper, with no limit on photos and graphic works.

With the student interest thus far shown and the budget the SGA approved, Tarnhelm promises to be an excellent representation of the literary talent on Capitol Campus.

The first winter term issue of the C.C. Reader will have an article explaining the purpose and history of Tarnhelm, a tentative meeting schedule, and submission and evaluation procedures for interested writers.

Tarnhelm News will be a regular part of the C.C. Reader during winter term.

Women still making less than men

Campus Digest News Service

Female executives in U.S. companies still get paid less than their male counterparts despite career gains in recent years, according to a study of women officers of the country's largest industrial companies and leading financial and retailing businesses.

Women are not being given the same amount of responsibilities as their male counterparts either, according to the study.

The typical female business executive earns less than $50,000 a year in cash. She is married, in her 40s and white. She comes from a low-income or lower middle-income background. She has at least one college degree, however, her parents did not attend college.

The proportion of female executives who have reached the level of vice president or above continues to increase. In 1980, the proportion is 28 percent as compared with 25.5 percent in 1979 and 25.2 percent in 1977.

Six of every 10 female officers earn less than $50,000 a year and three out of every 10 earn less than $30,000. The study also found that one of every five female executives earns $70,000 a year or more and 8.6 percent of them earn $100,000 or more.

The women typically have had three different full-time employers over their careers.

About a fourth of those surveyed have worked fewer than six years for their present employers, although another 22 percent have devoted 26 years or more to the same company.

Slightly more than 50 percent joined their current employer in a clerical capacity, but younger women were more likely to have joined the staff as managers or professionals.

Almost 80 percent of the female officers who lack college degrees had clerical jobs when they first joined their companies while only one-fourth of the college educated did.

Two-thirds of the women were promoted to their current jobs from within the company. More than a fourth of the executives hold a graduate degree. Advanced degree holders constitute nearly half of those who earn more than $50,000 a year.

Of the women surveyed, nearly six of 10 said that a master's degree in business administration is the most helpful in accelerating the progress of a woman just starting her career.

Three-fourths of the women officers said they had a scholastic average of B+ or higher during their undergraduate years. The survey found that the women with the higher salaries outperformed their male counterparts academically.
