Department of Safety Advises LEARN THE SIGNS Help a Choking Victim

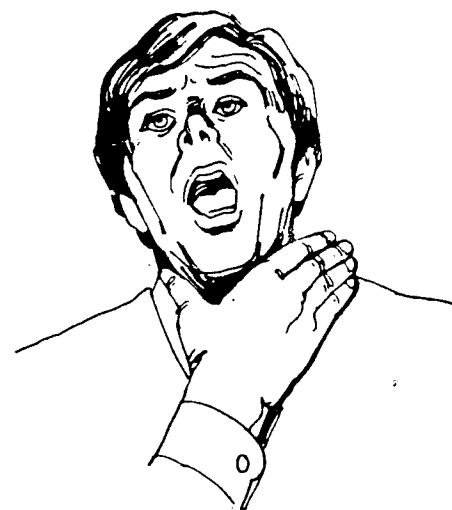

If you see someone grasping his neck, mouth open, coughing, trying to cough or showing exaggerated efforts to breathe, would you know what is happening or what to do? That is the question posed by Mr. James H. Paul, Safety and Police Services Specialist for Capitol Campus.

Mr. Paul advises that such a person is giving the universal distress signal for choking. Shortly after giving these signals the person will fall unconscious and death will follow quite rapidly. Some obstruction in the airway is preventing oxygen from reaching the lungs.

Approximately 2900 people died last year from accidental ingestion or inhalation of substances that obstructed their respiratory passages. Eighty percent of those victims were over the age of 25. Foreign body obstructions during eating are commonly associated with elevated blood alcohol, dentures and large pieces of food. The condition is sometimes referred to as "Cafe Coronary," because of its mistaken identity as a heart attack.

With proper training, quick responses and an accurate assessment of the problem, Mr. Paul points out that many lives could be saved. Both the American Red Cross and the American Heart Association conduct classes on how to help a choking victim. Check with your local chapter to get the details, or, for "on the spot" advice, contact the Department of Safety and Police Services or the School Nurse.
