Ask A Stupid Question...

By Bill Neil And Dave Caruso

Dear Sirs:
 Why is Coke the real thing?
 Jack Daniels

Dear Mr. Daniels,
 You are undoubtedly an exception to the rule. The majority of the students on this campus holds the opinion that Coke is not the real thing; it has long since been replaced by an assortment of "real things."

For someone with a name like yours, we're surprised that you even had to ask.

Dear Sirs:
 Why is engineering such an exclusively male field?
 Francis Guidarelli

Dear Fran,
 We weren't sure that your statement was valid, so we checked the roster of engineering students.

Unfortunately, we still aren't sure. You see, too many names on the roster are ambiguous, such as Pat, Les, Kim, etc. Frankly speaking, it was names such as yours that confounded us.

Judging from the names on the engineering roster, it is apparent that every Tom, Dick, and Harry is enrolled in other programs.

Dear Sirs:
 I am a taxpayer who is very upset with the way that our hard-earned money is used by the State Roads and Highway Commission. I would like to relate an example to you and your readers.

Why, with all the money pouring into the commission, can't they come up with a stop sign that works? I noticed this the other day when someone ran a stop sign. Of course, I wanted to test my theory, so I proceeded to follow, but my theory was to remain a hypothesis. Just as I went through the intersection, I was broadsided by a moped. It completely totalled my car.

So I ask you, what can be done to stop those arrogant so and so's from getting away with the deplorable habit of running stop signs?

Fed Up II

Dear Fed,
 We have learned that a foolproof stop sign is now in the works, figuratively speaking, at the Playboy Laboratories in Eyecatching, New York. It will eliminate once and for all the problem of men running stop signs, although it may create a problem of stopping too long. As for the fairer sex... well, all hope has been given up for women drivers.

Dear Sirs:

As I was walking to class last week, I noticed that several workmen were repairing the street lights in front of the Main Building.

What startled me, however, was one workman in particular who was perched atop a ladder eating his lunch.

Can you tell me why he was eating lunch instead of fixing the lights?
 Gina McGovern

Dear Gina,

He was eating lunch because he was hungry. As to his choice of dining areas, he is obviously a light eater.

Gentlemen:

Several years ago, the federal government initiated a nationwide inoculation campaign against swine flu.

What a waste of taxpayers' money! So what if all of our pigs catch the flu? Who really cares about dumb animals? Let them catch the flu and die, as far as I'm concerned.

N. Fluenza

Dear N.,

You are apparently misinformed about this matter. To begin with, Uncle Sam did not pay for the vaccine—McDonalds did.

Don't you realize that without pigs they would have no ham to make hamburgers with?

We disagree with your inhumane proposition to let "dumb animals" perish. Where would we be now if Col. Sanders hadn't supported the fight against chicken pox?

Gentlemen:

I have noticed some discrepancy lately over the word ketchup. I have always referred to it as catsup.

Which do you prefer?

Ann Ticipation

Dear Miss Ticipation,

We relish your question, but we prefer mustard.

Gentlemen:

Can you please tell me why the Christmas lights in the Dining Hall have not been taken down? Don't they know that Christmas was nearly two months ago?

Ebenezer Anderson

Dear Mr. Anderson,

Don't you have anything better to do with your time than to worry about such trivialities? Where is your Christmas spirit anyway, Ebenezer?

They'll remove the lights when they are good and ready. So if we were you, we would be careful not to eat the eggs we find on this year's Easter egg hunt.

If you have (or think you have) a question of reasonable stupidity, send it to us. We welcome any and all requests for information, and will make every effort to respond to each one we receive.
