Model U.N. delegates converge on Capitol

By Jen Dell'Alba

The "leaders of the world" are coming to Capitol Campus!

The thirteenth annual Capitol Campus Model United Nations will take place here February 21-23. The event is sponsored by the International Affairs Association and its faculty advisor, Clemmie Gilpin.

According to Ghan Desai, a representative from the IAA, approximately 300 students from 19 area schools will be participating in this year's Model U.N.

The opening ceremonies will include a keynote speech by Vladimir Pavlov, First Secretary, Embassy of the People's Republic of Bulgaria in Washington, D.C.

Capitol Campus holds the Model U.N. as a way for high school students to become aware of wordly topics and their possible solutions, Desai said. The topics are both political and social. IAA has scheduled discussions on Central America, the discrimination of women, world hunger, population growth, nuclear proliferation and other concerns, according to Desai.

"This model assembly is designed to promote greater understanding of the United Nations and to provide a forum for discussion of major international issues and concerns," Desai said.

International problems will be discussed by four committees. These committees include: the Political and Security Comthe Social, mittee; Humanitarian and Cultural Committee; the Special Political Committee; and the Security Council.

Each school is required to send at least one delegation to the event. Many schools send more, some up to ten delegations. A delegation consists of four students with one in each committee. The committees meet for five sessions and a General Plenary Assembly. IAA expects students to be prepared to "represent their country's policies and attain solutions," Desai noted.

Also included in the program is a social dance for the participating school students. The delegates, who will live on campus during the conference, will purchase meal tickets for the dining hall. They will sleep either in the dorms or in Meade

Heights.

All of the Capitol Campus United Nations Model ceremonies and sessions are open to the public. They will be held in the Olmsted Auditorium, the Multi-Purpose Building and the Science and Technology Building.

Concern about community image and reaction fronted opposition at a recent Presidents' Council meeting to the showing of "Debbie Does Dallas"

Joe Dezamits, of the Capitol Christian Fellowship (CCF), voiced his club's opposition to the showing of the X-rated movie in the campus student center tomorrow night. Dezamits said the CCF is concerned with the overall reaction of the college community to this film.

Other members of the council added their concerns as to how the movie will reflect on the image and reputation of Capitol Campus students in the community.

Defending the movie, Jeff Schnier, SUBOG president, panel discussion about the movie on Monday, Feb. 18 at 12:15 p.m. in the Gallery Lounge. The panel discussion, entitled "Should Debbie Have Done Dallas?", is being sponsored by SUBOG and the Residence Living Program.

Dezamits then suggested there be a show of hands by council members to express approval or disapproval of the showing of an X-rated movie on campus.

Before the show of hands could take place, however, Schnier motioned that there be a vote on whether the show of hands should be allowed. After the motion was properly seconded, a vote resulted in five votes for the show of hands, seven against and one abstention.

The $507,000 bookstore at Capitol Campus will open sometime in February, according to Joseph Kemp, manager of Maintenance and Utility Operations at Capitol.

The administration had planned to open the bookstore September 28, 1984, but problems with the weather and the contractors delayed the opening five months.

According to Kemp, problems with the general construction company caused the long delay. The general construction work was not completed to the satisfaction of the inspector or the university. "We want quality work and don't want to do more work after it is finished," he said.

The Carlisle Construction Company was contracted to perform the genral construction of the bookstore.

Speaking for the company, Vice President Bruce Rosendale "totally removed and replaced" the quarry-tile floor "at no expense to the university."

Creative Design Concepts of Franklin, Mass., received the contract to design

Herre Bros. Inc., of Harrisburg, did the electrical work while the mechanical work (heating and plumbing) is being done by Eshenaur's Inc., also of Harrisburg.

According to Kemp, the new bookstore will be much bigger and will contain more of a selection than the bookstore presently has. The bookstore will contain books, PSU items, Rest and (continued our pg.: 5)
