

Student court seeks 4 justices

by Stacy Krnjac

Student Court, the judicial body of Student Government Association, is seeking four new justices to fill its eight member team, according to Chief Justice Eugene Monahan.

Currently, the court has four members, Chief Justice Monahan and justices Jim Frey, Mike Noto and Darryl Schlappich, all residents of Meade Heights. They are looking for representatives from Church and Wrisberg halls and two commuters.

"We're trying to fulfill the guidelines and to follow traditional ways of getting justices," Monahan said. "We'd like to have every type of student represented."

The Student Court is a governmental organization in charge of student traffic violations and disciplinary problems in both the dormitories and Meade Heights.

It meets at a designated place every other week for approximately one hour to hear cases.

interested juniors, according to Monahan. "We would like to develop the court into an experienced one for next semester" said Monahan.

The qualifications necessary for a student court justice are a minimum grade point average of 2.0 and a fifth semester standing. They are looking for such qualities as "maturity and stability, a personal standard above reproach, and a wholesome attitude in regard to people in a disciplinary situation," according to Monahan.

Anyone interested in applying for a justice position on the student court should contact the office of student affairs located at 212 Olmstead for an application.

Concerning police matters Monahan said, "We would suggest students to watch for posters with information about parking stickers. Should they get a ticket they are allowed to appeal."

Students who wish to appeal a parking ticket should go to police services. The final decision lies with student court, according to Monahan.

NOT SO DUMB. Adding to the uproar over keeping freshmen on college playing fields, a new report finds freshman athletes' grades are the same as non-athlete freshmen
