

Capitol Campus welcomes

John Morreall

John Morreall, a new professor in the Humanities division this semester, earned a Ph.D. in philosophy from the University of Toronto.

According to Morreall, one of his professional goals is to make engineers see the value of Humanities.

"Humanities courses lead people to develop a questioning about what is going on around them, after all TMI is right outside the window."

Morreall said he likes the interdisciplinary nature of Capitol and feels it has potential. He most recently taught at Santa Clara University in California and Northwestern University. He currently teaches Western Tradition 1 (Hum 311) and Technology and Humanities (Hum 302).

Ali Emdad

Ali Emdad is the new assistant professor of computer applications. Emdad received a Ph.D. in information science from Case Western University in Cleveland, Ohio.

Emdad taught at Appalachian State University in North Carolina for three and a half years.

Currently, he is involved in research on "query language structures in full-text retrieval systems."

Emdad said he is also interested in micro-computer applications.

Ellen M. Shatto

Ellen Shatto, a calculus professor, has been with Penn State Capitol Campus for seven years. However, this is her first semester as a full-time professor. From 1977 to 1979 she was a graduate student. She was been a part-time professor at Capitol from 1979 until last spring.

Shatto studied at Lebanon Valley College as an undergraduate, where she received a degree in Education specializing in mathematics.

Currently, she is working on her Ph.D. in science at the University of Pennsylvania. This semester she will also be taking a correspondence course at Capitol.

Shatto compared her experiences at Capitol to those of her undergraduate days at Lebanon Valley, which she said was also a small school.

"I like the small campus atmosphere," she said. "I've really enjoyed the opportunity to meet people on a personal level."

Louise E. Hoffman

Louise Hoffman left a seven year teaching position at Virginia Technical Institute for Capitol Campus because "This job has more potential and allows you to teach in a specialized area."

Hoffman earned a Ph.D. in history from Bryn Mawr college and a bachelor of arts degree from Michigan State.

Hoffman is currently doing research on the history of psychoanalysis. "I already have a publisher who is interested in the book so I believe my first goal is to finish it."

Hoffman said she had other job possibilities but chose this area because it has much better access to research facilities including the library at the Hershey Medical Center.

This semester Hoffman is teaching Western Tradition 3 (Hum 313) and Cultural History: 19th Century Europe (Hum 405).

Mukund Kulkarni

Mukund Kulkarni joins Capitol's business administration division this semester.

Kulkarni earned a Ph.D. in Finance from the University of Kentucky, a bachelor of arts degree in Economics and Statistics from India and a masters degree in general business from Marshall University.

"I came here from teaching at Michigan Tech mainly because the weather there was so cold and the Harrisburg area provides more opportunity for industrial and business development," Kulkarni said.

"Michigan Tech was in a
