

Honor Society Elects Officers

By Sharon Olmstead

Members of the honor society, Delta Tau Kappa, elected new officers in February, and Louise Hoffman, assistant professor of humanities and history, has agreed to be their advisor.

President Charlie Heiser is a public policy major, as is Denise VanBriggle, the vice president. Secretary Stephanie Pinko is majoring in American studies, and the treasurer is Lenann Miller, a behavioral science major.

The society has planned two lunch-time speakers for the Gallery Lounge for March. Carol Nechemias, assistant professor of public policy, and students who are going to the Soviet Union over spring break, will talk on March 16 about their trip and the experiences they had.

In March, Robert Bresler, chairman of public policy who is on leave from Capital College this year and is at the Army War College, will talk about the significance of future arms negotiations.

Two speakers are planned for April: Michael Stetter, a psychologist who will speak on "Kidstress," and Jo Sterner, director of the Rape Crisis Center in Harrisburg, will discuss rape.

DTK is an international honor society which is open to students with a 3.0 average cum for undergraduates and a 3.5 cum for graduate students. Students must also have 20 credit hours completed in any social science.

This social science honor society exists to promote interdisciplinary studies in the social studies and to give recognition for excellence to qualified students. Membership in this group will enrich your resume and your life on campus. Lifetime membership costs $20. Pick up applications in the Student Activities Office.

Beth Jones Promoted

By Kathleen Riley-King

Beth Jones, former administrative assistant of the Business division, has been promoted to the position of coordinator of undergraduate Business programs.

Having been with the Business division since October 1983, Jones has new duties which include handling more student problems and working in conjunction with division head Dr. Melvin Blumberg to formulate schedules of courses.

Other of Jones' duties include developing and supervising academic advising programs, such as the new Business Advising Center, and coordinating the accreditation report for the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB).

Jones, along with two graduate assistants, also works with faculty on division research projects--i.e. individual faculty research in marketing, management, etc.
