student-run conferences to allow students at both colleges to explore common goals and consider joint initiatives for children in area public schools. The training will include exposure to volunteer and public service efforts throughout the state.

The steering committee will hire a student for the position of Inter-Campus Collaborate Project Coordinator to be responsible for coordinating the two conferences and day-to-day operations on grant projects.

Priority for hiring a student to fill the $6.00-an-hour position will be given to a student who attended both colleges.

Interested students should contact the Student Activities Office in room 212, Olmsted, or call 948-6273.

approximately four percent use steroids, the same amount using crack, Harris added.

"Maybe somebody out there should be looking into the widespread use of steroids," stated Harris.

Healthcare is another serious concern for the public, according to Harris. Only 10 percent of the people believe the health care system is in good shape compared with 29 percent in Great Britain and 56 percent in Canada. Harris said 61 percent of the people would prefer a national health care system as in Canada, and he sees this number rising in the 90s.

Harris views the role of a public opinion analyst like that of a messenger. "We figure out what the people are trying to say and take it to the powers that be," he said.

Harris is best known for his survey research on public affairs. Some of his landmark achievements include a nationwide survey of Congressional ethics for the House Commission on Administrative Review, a survey on how to restore faith in government for the Senate, and advances in election night projections.

In addition, he served on the late John F. Kennedy's strategy committee during the 1960 presidential election campaign.

Besides work in politics, Harris has been influential in the economic, environmental, telecommunications, and energy areas.

Harris has appeared on television as a public opinion analyst, on National Public Radio as a political analyst, and in more than 170 newspapers as a syndicated columnist. He has also written four books.
