Bill Miller

A look at Native American culture

Paula Styer
Capital Times Staff

Bill Miller entered the Gallery Lounge Tuesday afternoon, black hair hanging past the shoulders, wearing jeans, shirt, leather vest, black silver-tipped boots, and, around the neck, beads.

Miller, a member of the Stockbridge-Munsee tribe of the Mohican Nation; is a singer, songwriter, and musician. His father was a full-blooded Indian and his mother a full-blooded German. "Some people think I'm a long-haired Italian," Miller joked.

As part of the Heritage Series, Miller gave a concert of folksongs, accompanied by a guitar, and music on a woodland flute.

His songs tell of Native Americans and his childhood memories. In "Broken Bottles" he sings of growing up on a reservation and playing in garbage dumps, looking for toys.

One line from the song is significant to Miller's life.

"I let the sun shine when others made it rain," he said, "means Don't let others get you down because they think you're less."

In high school he hung around with people who were not popular.

"My friends were always overweight and the girls I knew weren't pretty," Miller said. "I was a nerd."

Miller has sung on the Nashville Network on television, and in stripclubs and pool halls.

"The most satisfying is playing for an intimate group like little children were I can tell stories," Miller said.
