Hanks Pen Rambles on Dating

By Hank Rappold
Capital Times Staff

Editors note: With Valentines Day upon us Hank's pen went off the handle trying to figure girls out.

I'm sorry I just don't understand females nor do I think I ever will.

It's been said that it's a woman's right to change her mind; and believe me, they seem to take full advantage of this. Everytime I think I've figured a girl out she'll turn around and do the exact opposite of what I figured she would do. Why is this I ask you?

Still the biggest problem I have with females is trying to figure out their dating procedures. Each and every female seems to have her own set rules on dating. Because I am trying to understand some of these different dating philosophies, I have conducted some research and found out what one particular girl likes in guys.

First, I should dress in docksiders, Levi's (no Lee's here) and sweaters with Polo shirts. OK, that's easy enough; all I have to do is wear nice clothes. Then she told me that she doesn't like her face licked, and not to call her babe, and always keep the popcorn near her. So in other words, I should let her take care of her own personal hygiene, show respect to her and keep her fed. Just like a pet, isn't it?

She likes intellectual conversation, but don't mimmick her! That's bad. Mimmicking her and bugging her when she is tired would get me into hot water. Also, don't fall asleep too early. I should go home if I'm tired. OK, so far all I have to be is a well dressed, wide awake, feeding machine. Piece of cake isn't it?

When I'm taking her skiing in my nice car (required) I better not play country music. She doesn't like that. I can also take her hiking or swimming or just go and watch the sunset. This is real easy; now things are becoming fun.

She likes gold and flowers. Still, even if I get these gifts for her, I can't run my hands through her hair when it's just been sprayed. This too, will get me into trouble. I should remeber not to be cheap and to keep my hair short and dark if possible. All right, just buy her frivolous gifts and keep my hands to myself. Now this is getting ridiculous!

So, with these few simple rules and some common sense I can have a happy relationship with this girl. That's all right with me, but all girls are different aren't they? What happens if I meet a girl who likes a guy in sweats and sneakers? Or what happens if I meet a girl who likes it when guys get their fingers stuck in her hair? Does this mean I have to learn all new rules? Why can't there be a common set of rules? This isn't fair!

If all else fails, I can still try asking "Hey baby, what's your sign?" and take it from there. Wish me luck!

Men

By Lisa and Friends
Special to Capital Times

One night a few friends of mine got together and were discussing what a man seems to look (or doesn't look for) in a woman.

Unfortunately we all came to the same conclusion that today there is a complexity to dating. Women look for that special man to make them happy and men just look for a woman that...

Well, first men look for women that are very attractive. These women must fit into the correct weight category and all around nice body measurements. That is until the next attractive woman walks by.

Also, men want to take a girl home that mom will approve of and dad will flirt with. His friends must also be attracted to this girl so he will feel good about himself. But this woman should not be more attractive than the man because his ego will be really hurt (And we can't have that, can we?)

Men generally do not want a women smarter than them because it takes energy to impress smart women. The fact is, it isn't the women's brains men are interested in anyway.

Around the holidays men get very cheap and break up with their respected female partner so they don't have to spend their money on cards, flowers or other thoughtful gifts.

The last thing a man really wants is a woman that has been brought up with a sense of commitment, trust and honesty. Because once a man has a woman's trust, girl, he can do whatever he wants to.
