Garver, from page 8

says she is a member of Greenpeace, and "loves whales."

"Students today are definitely not as political and seem to be more serious about education," Garver says. She's quick to add that students have remained friendly and polite regardless of their values or decade.

Garver could be classified as a craft fanatic, and says she will fill much of her free time with projects. Just a few of her hobbies include ceramics, painting, macrame, stained glass, and calligraphy. Garver also sews and says she "enjoys making all kinds of dolls and bears."

Though not officially retired until August 30, Garver is presently on vacation from work. She says she's "keeping busy," and began swimming three times a week. Garver says she also plans to travel after retiring.

"I'm already planning to go to Colorado next month," she says.

Garver says the things she will miss most about Penn State Harrisburg are the students and the people she works with.

"I've been over there [to school] almost a dozen times to see people since I've been gone."

Nudes, from page 9

nudes because it was the idea of man being created in God's image," Thomas said.

Communications major Jeff Hildebrand said he feels the photos "may not offer the nude in the proper perspective," and perhaps displaying the originals [by Michelangelo, etc.] next to the photos would give people "a different perspective" on the exhibit.

Bostick's collection of nudes will be hanging in the Humanities Gallery until the end of September.
