

Not invited to see Hillary Clinton? Join the club.

Hillary Clinton visited Penn State Harrisburg, and your invitation got lost in the mail.

Relax, you are not alone. Only a few students knew about the visit. If you were one who lifted your head from the books for a moment to hear the whisper that Hillary Clinton was visiting our campus, then you were in a state of grace.

What was the big secret? As students, you all should have had the opportunity to see Hillary Clinton in person.

If you happened to sneak a peek at the first lady, then you were lucky.

Only ten PSH students were allowed to attend the luncheon and brainstorming session in the Educational Activities Building. However, the students could not get a word in edgewise about their feelings on health care reform.

What most of the highly educated professionals present failed to address was that health care reform is, and will be, the responsibility of college-age students in the future. If more students had been allowed to attend the conference, they probably would have made significant contributions to the discussions.

I was among the lucky ones to have had the chance to participate in the conference.

So, what was the big secret? Was a single PSH figurehead to share the limelight alone with Hillary Clinton? Or, maybe it was the Secret Service who admonished everyone to secrecy.

CORRECTION:

Last issue's editorial had stated that Bill Clinton was our 52nd president. However, the editorial meant to say that Bill Clinton is the United States' 42nd president, and his inauguration was the country's 52nd inaugural.

No PR=low turnout for Hillary's visit

To the Editor:

There was an air of excitement and anticipation around campus on Thursday as workers were reporting for an otherwise normal work day. The TV equipment and reporters filled the parking lot behind the CUB.

Around noon, somehow the fifth grade classes at the nearby school had word of the first lady's visit. They certainly helped provide a very nice backdrop for the event. Only a handful of staff were on hand when the motorcade arrived at the Educational Activities Building. It appeared that Hillary and Tipper were genuinely pleased with the attention they received. The few of us who made it on time to see the motorcade were thrilled to give the women a warm reception.

It was obvious security was very important; however, they are in the public on many occasions. There should have been better campus promotion for the appearance of Hillary and Tipper at the health care reform conference.

Library's art display on the pale side

Dear Editor:

The displays in the library are always enjoyable and enlightening. We are presently honoring Black History Month with a commemorative display. But what was the previous month's display--to honor the Elitist White Women of Central Pennsylvania? The photographic display of prominent women in central Pennsylvania was blatantly devoid of women of color. The conspicuousness of this omission was embarrassing.

Could not Deanne Burch find one prominent citizen in our area who was a woman of color? Do we have to perpetuate the myth that Camp Hill (where Deanne's studio is located) is the "White Shore"? Please take cultural diversity into consideration before giving Ms. Burch such advertising again.

P.S. I am not a woman of color!
