Spawn heads list of best comics

Superman is loved not only because he protects the innocent, but because he provides an example of what is best in people. He shows that society can rise above the troubles that plague our world. When Superman died last year, the country mourned.

It was not until my friend in the Army re-introduced me to comics again that I realized what I was missing. The quality of writing in the comic books is better than ever, and there are more than 600 titles to choose from.

The style of certain comics are as varied as the names of some of their heroes. To help those who would like to start reading comics but don't know how to separate the best from the mediocre, here's a list of my ten favorite titles and the companies that publish them:

Spawn (Image)
Perhaps the most popular title on the market today, Spawn walks the earth as a soldier from Hell while fighting to regain his humanity.

Incredible Hulk (Marvel)
No longer big, green, and stupid, the Hulk is now big, green, and intelligent. Writer Peter David and artist Gary Frank bring us his exploits as the Hulk fights for human rights around the world and tries to keep his wife happy.

John Byrne's Next Men (Dark Horse)
Veteran artist and writer John Byrne has brought a new twist to the superhero formula by creating realistic characters without funny costumes or strange powers.

The Sandman (DC/Vertigo)
It's not really a superhero, but a master of dreams. This is one of the must-have comics and definitely one where strong writing is emphasized. The series may be coming to close soon, so buy a copy while you still can.

Adventures of Superman (DC)
The Man of Steel lives again. The quality of any Superman comic has always been the best in art and in writing. He is living proof you cannot keep a good hero down. The new television show is great too.

Magnus: Robot Fighter (Valiant)
The Gold Key comics character of the 1960s has been revived for the high-tech 90s. Magnus lives in the year 4002 and protects the people of NorthAm from malevolent robots while fighting not to transform into one.

Batman (DC)
Perhaps one of the best known heroes, the Dark Knight of Gotham City has been portrayed in more ways and through more media vehicles than any other superhero. He fights gangsters, the supernatural, and sometimes, his very sanity. Batman is dark, brooding, and wholly believable.

Uncanny X-Men (Marvel)
Even better than the cartoon on Saturday mornings, they fight for the rights of their kind in a hostile world. When they laugh or cry, so do we, which is what brings so many readers back month after month.

Cerebus the Aardvark (Aardvark/Vanaheim)
This is the most successful independent comic made. Creator David Sim's aardvark, trapped in a world of humans, has been an emperor, a warrior, and even became the Pope once. It's made for people who like satire and inner meaning.

Spectacular Spiderman (Marvel)
Not to be confused with the seven or eight other Spiderman titles, this is the best one. Drawn monthly by Sal Buscema, spiderman is still one of the most virtuous superheroes.
