Police Services responded to two incidents that occurred the week of January 23, 1995.

On Monday, January 23, patrol responded to a false alarm at 12:25 p.m. in the Olmstead Building. The picture alarm, set off accidentally, was reset, and no further action was necessary.

On Wednesday, January 25, a solicitation warning was given to an unknown male who was attempting to sell perfume door to door in the dorms. Patrol responded to the call around 1:30 p.m., advising the male of the university's policy of solicitation, and requesting him to leave the campus, which he did.

visibility for Penn State Harrisburg is also very important," Dr. Carrubba said. "Going to conferences and talking about it and being present on various boards nationally."

Dr. Carrubba said that he was very much in favor of strong faculty development, to allow faculty to do research and work on other projects.

"I very much like to sit down with people and discuss things, that's the way that I work. I work collegially," Dr. Carrubba said. "My style is to set up a regular agenda of what the agendas are and what we need to be talking about."

"Scholarship was part of my profession for my many years of teaching and I came to administration much later in life than most," Dr. Carrubba said. "I have maintained scholarship as a hobby, however, in my life. I guess I have been an academic person all of my life."

Dr. Carrubba was the dean of the graduate school for the University of North Carolina at Charlotte from 1985-1991. Dr. Carrubba was the founding dean of the graduate school.

"Founding a school of your own is an opportunity that comes along once in a lifetime and to take it to the point where it became a doctoral institution," Dr. Carrubba said. "That was an exciting six years of my life."

When responding to a question on dealing with problems and with administrating, Dr. Carrubba said that he felt that when a group of people get together, they all profit from each other's knowledge and perspectives and work out a final policy.

"I like to listen, I like to work one on one and to work with groups and I like to do it in a collegial manner," Dr. Carrubba said.

"I really believe in the statement that the heart of a university is its faculty, and its first concern is for the good of its students," Dr. Carrubba said.

Dr. Carrubba said that he felt that this was still a young institution and we need to see what PSH has accomplished, and it also must create a serious environment so that the com-building. The old library will be converted into offices and class rooms in a separate renovation project, according to Dr. Shill.

The college has worked very hard to make this dream become reality. The previous provost and the board of advisors, among others, worked closely with individual legislators to persuade them to keep the new library in the capital budget bill. According to Shill, the strong support of House Democratic Leader William Dewese was critical to the passage of the bill.

"I think it's a sign by the state that the state will continue to support Penn State Harrisburg," Dr. Matthew Wilson, associate professor of humanities, said. "It is absolutely fundamental to our survival as an institution."

Dr. Ruth Leventhal, the former provost and Dr. Shill attended "eye-opener" breakfasts held in the Harrisburg to generate publicity. A fundraiser dinner held in September 1993 resulted in an initial contribution of $19,000-$20,000.

President Thomas personally talked to Gov. Casey in September 1994 about the severity of the problems in the old library. At Provost Leventhal's retirement dinner, an additional $14,000 was raised for the construction of the new facility.

The Black Student Union held a "Have A Heart" campaign last year, in which for a $1 contribution to the new library, students and faculty could send a valentine to Gov. Casey. They also visited Mrs. Casey and presented her with a cake to show their support of the "Library of the Future."

The Student Government Association of Penn State Harrisburg established a constitution and by-law revision committee to review, correct and make necessary changes to their present constitution at the Jan. 17 meeting.

Constitution committee chairman, Larry Pouget, said that the student government has outgrown parts of the constitution and by-laws currently in effect.

The constitution revision committee will outline "any proposed amendments and changes, thereby resulting in a report to the senate and a referendum, for approval during the next general elections period," according to the proposal.

In other business, The SGA Cabaret Committee announced that cash prizes will be awarded at the "Murder Mystery." The event will be held at 9 p.m. Feb. 21 in the Dining Commons, according to Student Activities Coordinator Janet Widoff.

Also as part of Cabaret, magician Mack King, will perform at 9 p.m. on March 21 in the Dining Commons, Widoff said.

Treasurer Erich Schneider said that $2587.38 remains in SGA emergency funds for the spring semester.

SGA approved $1404 of the emergency funds to help finance the Penn State Professional Engineers and Contractors trip to San Diego, Calif.

Also announced, The Leadership Conference will be at 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., Saturday, Feb. 11. All students are invited to attend.

Community members will also be invited to work with students during the conference. A free lunch and a leadership mug will be provided to those in attendance.

During an open forum, SGA decided to discuss the possibility of a MAC machine on campus and the Rites of Spring celebration at a future meeting.

What Boxer Could Bring to PSH

University of Redlands in California. She then received both her master's degree and her Ph.D. in history from the University of California at Riverside.

Dr. Boxer has worked as a teacher and scholar for the past 21 years and as a full-time administrator for the past 10 years.

Despite the fact that she is serving as vice president, she still teaches one class a semester.

"At my school we have around 26,000 students, but by teaching a class I know that maybe 30 of those students are mine and I like to keep in touch with them," Dr. Boxer said.

Dr. Boxer explained why the PSH job is enticing to her.

"Penn State is one of the major research facilities in the nation and that really intrigues me," Dr. Boxer said. "That fact that Penn State Harrisburg is such a small school also is a great attraction."

Dr. Boxer also added that PSH's location, near the capitol of a major state, would provide a regional metropolitan urban focus to be integrated into the teaching and faculty focus.

"I am an interactive, hands on person and I bring a lot of passion to what I do and I feel that may be best suited for a small school," Dr. Boxer said. "I want to be part of a school that is student centered, teaching centered, to be interactive and a place where people can get to know each other."

"I feel that I could come here as an administrator who's dedicated to facilitating the work of others," Dr. Boxer said. "I look for opportunities to facilitate to others and to build bridges that are two way."

Dr. Boxer said that she has done a great deal on program studies and wouldn't have a problem with any of the programs, even though her major was history. She said that she would build on faculty interests.

When asked how accessible she would be to the students she said that she would expect to meet regularly with student body representatives.

"The purpose of our being here is to teach the students," Dr. Boxer said. "My door will always be open to the students and I hope that they would take advantage of that."

When asked how she would raise funds, particularly for the new library, she said that going out into the community and getting people to give money to the campus is something that she feels that she does fairly well. She felt that she would be able to look for opportunities to advance the campus.

"She has a bright new outlook on things," George Hahner, a junior communications major, said. "When it came to answering the questions she was very precise, she was down to earth. Overall I think that she is a very intelligent woman and would be a great choice."

Liz Caralyus, a senior criminal justice major, said she felt that she made some good points but that she also sometimes side-stepped some of the questions, and said some things that she thought people wanted to hear.

"She made some really good points, but whether or not she carries through with them who knows," Caralyus said.

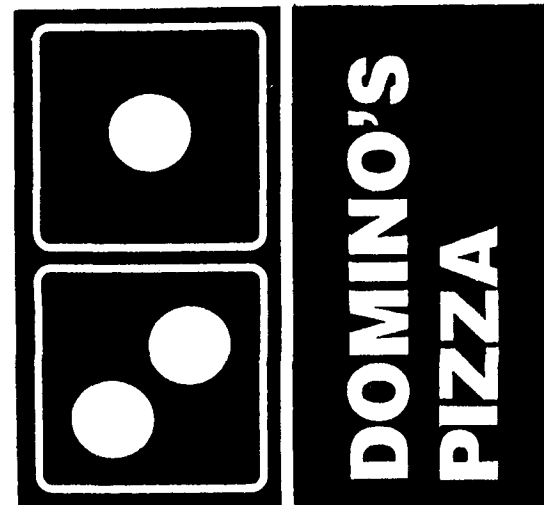

"I think that she could bring a lot of good qualities and tremendous experience and creativeness and innovation to our campus," Student Government President Andrea Poplawski, a junior public policy major, said. "As of today I would be very comfortable working with her."

Dr. Hoffman, associate professor of humanities and history, said that she had read some of Dr. Boxer's work and that she is very well regarded as a historian.

"I am very interested in seeing someone come here who is a real scholar and knows what good scholarship is," Dr. Hoffman said. "We have been missing that for sometime, so that is a point in her favor. Another thing in her favor is the fact that she has continued teaching. Administrators here very often cease teaching altogether. I understand that the demands on them are very heavy, but if they neither teach nor do research they become out of touch with the main functions of the university. Then they become bureaucrats and they become less and less understanding of the students and the faculty who are doing what the university is mainly here to do."
