

Who Deserves to be NBA All-Star Starters?

Frank Nieto
Staff Writer

It's All-Star time in the N.B.A., a time when the best of the best are supposed to play each other. Supposed to. Most of the time it's just a contest featuring the most popular players in the league. As it stands now Charles Barkley, Dan Majerle, Latrell Sprewell, and Grant Hill will start, but they shouldn't. This is what the line-ups should look like:

EAST:

Power Forward - Tyrone Hill (Cleveland) - Hill doesn't know the meaning of the word pretty, but he gets the job done (16 p.p.g. and 11 r.p.g.).

Small Forward - Scottie Pippen (Chicago) - The most complete player in the world, besides a certain minor league baseball player.

Center - Shaquille O'Neal (Orlando) - Overhyped? Probably. The best center in the East? Definitely. (Sorry, Patrick).

Point Guard - Dana Barros (Philadelphia) - Almost an afterthought in the Hersey Hawkins-Kendall Gill trade a few years ago, Barros has turned out to be the best player involved. Barros has gone from being a three point specialist to one of the top five guards in the league.

Shooting Guard - Joe Dumars (Detroit) - The comeback player of the year, regardless of Clyde Drexler. Dumars has benefited from rule changes, but he looks like his old Finals M.V.P. self.

WEST:

Power Forward - Shawn Kemp (Seattle) - Kemp might be the most underrated player in the league. Most people think that Kemp is a smaller Shaq, but Kemp makes his free throws and has a deadly jumper from 15 feet in.

Small Forward - Cedric Ceballos (Los Angeles Lakers) - Ceballos was the steal of the year for the Lakers. They gave up a draft pick and got a guy that averaged 19 p.p.g. last year off of a very deep Phoenix bench. Ceballos has become what the Suns thought Richard Dumas was - Dr. J with a jumper.

Center - David Robinson (San Antonio) - Hakeem may have a ring, Shaq may have a kung-fu game, and Alonzo may have the meanest streak in the league, but The Admiral has the distinction of being the best by a very wide margin.

Point Guard - John Stockton (Utah) - He may look like a chump, but he is one of the three greatest ball handlers in league history (behind Magic Johnson and Bob Cousy).

Point Guard - Gary Payton (Seattle) - Payton is so good he lets everyone know it, then backs it up. He's so good he knocks the shooting guard spot out of the West's starting line-up.

Eagles owner comes to senses

It's a good thing Eagles owner Jeff Lurie came to his senses and eliminated Dick Vermeil from competition for the head coaching job.

Vermeil was a loser when he first coached the Eagles, why bring him back? Now maybe the Eagles will hire Tony Dungy away from the Vikings. Dungy would bring intimidation back to the Eagles, something they lost when they fired Buddy Ryan.

The Minnesota Timberwolves and L.A. Clippers must be counting the days until they can get their shots at UMass' Loe Roc. Roc would be perfect for either of these teams, he won't take losing and might get rid of some whiners (Christian Laettner) and underachievers (Pooh Richardson) physically.

If I had the number pick in the N.F.L. draft, I wouldn't even consider any other player to take except for Steve "Air" McNair.

MARITHE & FRANCOIS GIRBAUD FOR JUNIORS, MEN AND BOYS

1995 COLLECTION

Marithe' and Francois Girbaud, designers of the jeanswear collection that bears their name, have never followed fashion trends. Rather, it is their consistent innovative use of new shapes, fabrics and treatments that creates a gentle progression of thoughts and ideas from one season to the next. Spring and Summer 1995 coalesce under the celebration of diversity, the rejection of outmoded fashion dictates and the renaissance of handcrafted workmanship.

From the carpenters of America to the workers in China, Marithe' and Francois Girbaud have created a collection that is as varied and individual as the people who wear it.

The color story for Spring takes a new path. Rich vegetable tones, such as orange (a stormy grey), poudre (a rose grey), olive and turquoise are scaled against their blanched counterparts: prune runs to rose, olive becomes celery, and so on. Planet Violette, Marithe' and Francois Girbaud's unique sulfur-treated denim collection, possesses a distinct artistic sensibility. Original pieces were sulfur treated to impart a celestial blue-violet tone. This season, the group now includes a wide range of hues from blush to slate. Fabric mixing, dropped needle fabric treatment and decorative topstitching lend detail, creating a folkloric feel.

New and innovative fabrics are the cornerstone of Marithe' and Francois Girbaud. From drapery Tencel pieces that feel softer than your oldest pair of jeans, to the retro look of honeycomb knots and terry cloth, the collection melds playful and innovative fabrics with forward silhouettes.

For juniors, shapes are both relaxed and body conscious. Tops, especially sleeveless shirts, baby tees and close-fitting vests are basic looks for Spring. Often cropped, these shrunken shirts are paired with stovepipe-shaped pants or a tiny pair of short shorts. The overall, a denim mainstay, takes on a more feminine feel as an overall mini jumper, shortall or tiny, skin baring vest.

For men, a shape that looks to the past while merging the beat of today is the key. A button-down, convertible-collared shirt in retro terry cloth or a honeycomb weave cotton is cool and comfortable when paired with flat front khakis or Brand X Shorts. Vests are another top look, zip or button-up front. In summer-light linen, the look is natural and casual when paired with antique jeans. A mandarin-collared sulfur washed shirt is a new alternative to the basic denim jacket.

Boys will be boys with Girbaud's playful shapes and prints. The mood is stripey, big and colorful - surf culture circa early 1960's. Oversized striped terry cloth tee-shirts and Hawaiian-inspired prints and logos are paired with colorful, baggy denim shorts for fun on or off the beach.
